However, last week, House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee Chairman John Mica, R-FL., dropped the labor rider but attached a rider that proposed to eliminate the Essential Âir Ŝervice, a program that subsidizes some rural airports in the Lower 48. The reform would save $16.6 million a year. Begich warned that while the policy rider does not eliminate the EAS in Alaska, a piecemeal attack on the program might threaten the viability of the service in Alaska in the future. "House Representatives want to cut out a lot of money out of the bill, but they don't want to have conversation, they just hold firm," said Croes.

Construction workers, engineers and planners were told not to come to worksites across the country after the FAA was forced to issue stop work orders on projects ranging from the construction of new air traffic control towers to the rehabilitation and modernization of air traffic facilities. Nearly 4,000 FAA personnel nationwide were furloughed on Saturday.

FAA public information officer Mike Fergus said that 79 FAA employees in Anchorage have been furloughed. He explained that the FAA has no authority to release funds to airport improvement projects even though the funding has been approved and that the FAA's authority to pay bills stopped Friday midnight.

However, according to Meadow Bailey, spokeswoman for the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, the entity that operates the state's airports, the only construction project that will be negatively impacted in northwest Alaska is a rehabilitation project for the Deadhorse airport. Max Croes with Begich's office said that a stop work order also was given for an $800,000 improvement project for the Bethel Airport.

Airport improvement projects in Nome and Kotzebue, DOT's Meadow Bailey said, are not impacted as the projects have been authorized and funded. Bailey explained that the Deadhorse airport project was going to bid and the DOT/PF has to give the contractor notice to proceed by August 15, but can't authorize the request for bids when there is no funding available. If the project is halted now, it will be delayed until 2013.

Fergus said that the FAA continues to provide air traffic control and safety services. The FAA bill sets aviation policies and authorizes funding for air traffic controllers, building runways and the NextGen modernization of the nation's air traffic control system from radar to a more accurate satellite tracking system.

A FAA press release states that while this lapse in FAA's authorization affects thousands of public and private sector jobs, the safety of the flying public will not be compromised.

Senator Lisa Murkowski's office called for a clean extension of the FAA reauthorization. She said in a release that the greatest concern to the state is that the furloughed employees include the 18 employees from the FAA Alaska Region Airports Division, who are issuing Airport Improvement Program grants and doing the environmental review function for expected AIP funded projects.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENT— Port Commissioner Jimmy Adams points to a potential mooring spot for small craft on a port picture held by harbor master Joy Baker as PND engineer Sandra Morris looks on. The regularly scheduled port meeting was canceled but Morris took input on fender replacement.

Fenders to be replaced at Nome harbor

By Diana Haecker

With only two commissioners present, Charlie Lean and Jimmy Adams, the Port Commission had no quorum for last Thursday's regular scheduled meeting and canceled the show for the night.

No official business was discussed, but harbormaster Joy Baker introduced Sandra Morris, senior engineer for PND Engineers who was in Nome to take a look at ice damage to fenders on the south wall of the inner harbor. Morris was available for comments from present commissioners for solutions to tackle the problem at hand.

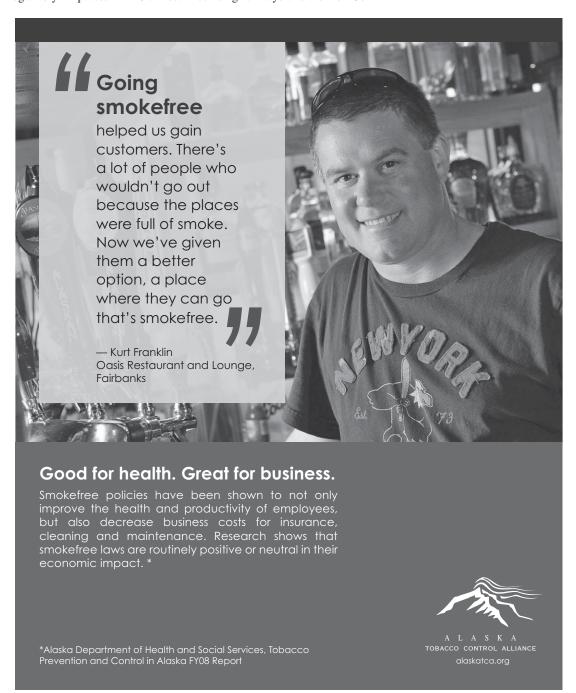

"You do have some ice issues," said Morris. Morris said she took a good look at the piles at the fishermen's dock that suffered from ice damage on the embedment. The engineer said it seemed that the piles are not embedded enough in the ground and suggested to replace them with piles that are smaller in diameter as they would cut through the ice rather than be pulled off the ground like the bigger piles.

Morris told the Nome Nugget that she'd be making suggestions to the city regarding replacing of the inadequate fenders with new styles that would withstand the ice action.

On the agenda of the meeting were port director and harbor master reports and the PND engineering report.

The meeting was rescheduled to Tuesday July 26 at 7 p.m.

OUT WITH THE DIRT - U.S. Air Force employees are excavating, bagging and hauling out PCB-contaminated soil from the White Alice installation on top of Anvil Mountain. The soil clean up is slated to be complete this summer.

Clean up work underway at White Alice

By Diana Haecker

Clean up work to remove polychlorinated biphenyl-contaminated soil at the White Alice site on Anvil Mountain is near completion, says Steve Hunt, the remedial project manager with the U.S. Air Force's 611th civil engineer squadron at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson.

The land used for the White Alice, the military's distant early warning line system during the cold war, spreads over 11.7 acres atop Anvil Mountain. The use of PCBs and fuel leaks from fuel tanks left contamination on the installation grounds, which are now being cleaned up.

Hunt explains that the land was withdrawn from the public domain for military purposes to erect the four antennas that are still left standing and other buildings, including a vehicle garage and fuel tanks. Before the land can be relinquished back to the public, the military needs to clean up the site from toxic substances.

Hunt says that a crew of five to seven Air Force employees are currently excavating about 400 cubic yards of contaminated soil from the site. The soil is screened and material with PCB contamination of more than one milligram per kilogram the state and federal standard to allow unrestricted land use - is then loaded up in containers and shipped out to a special disposal facility in Oregon. "So far this summer, we have containerized approximately 3 million pounds of contaminated soil," said Hunt. Hunt said that excavation and soil removal of a similar amount of soil was done last year already. The soil clean up, he said, is 75 percent complete. "We expect to complete the excavation this summer," Hunt said.

After the military cleans up the PCB there are still asbestos panels to be removed from the antennas. Hunt said the asbestos panel removal could start as early as this summer. "When we're done with the PCBs and the asbestos removal, the Bureau of Land Management will consider whether the site is suitable to be transferred to the public domain and then on to Sitnasuak Native Corporation," Hunt said. And how about the towers? "Assuming that we have concurrence with the Native Corporation, the land in that condition would be relinquished to the BLM and then immediately to Sitnasuak. The land will be conveyed with the towers," Hunt said.

The White Alice structures went up in 1957 at the beginning of the cold war to provide an early warning radio system. New satellite communications made the technology obsolete in the late 1970s and the system was deactivated.

Do you have barometric bones? The effects of weather on joint pain

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

People with arthritis or other pain syndromes often complain that their pain is worsened with certain types of weather. Some people even claim to have barometric bones, the ability to predict an approaching weather change by a worsening of joint pain and stiff-

Is there any scientific evidence to support this common phenomenon?

There is plenty of anecdotal evidence. As early as 400 B.C., ancient Greek and Roman doctors noted that many illnesses were related to changes in the seasons. This led to common phrases like "feeling under the weather."

By 1930, the Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) reported that there was strong evidence that warm weather was beneficial while low barometric pressure was detrimental to patients with arthritis.

Doctors continue to recognize the have a hard time experimentally testing these effects because it is next to impossible to replicate a weather system in the laboratory. In 1961, an arthritis specialist named Hollander tried. Dr. Hollander designed a pressure chamber to manipulate ALASKA barometric pressure and humidity FAMILY in an attempt to test how these DOCTOR test now these fect a person with arthritis. His study found that arthritis patients reported more pain with both increased humidity and a falling barometric pressure only when these factors occur simultaneously.

Since then, many studies have found that patients with osteoarthritis, rheumatoid arthritis, and fibromyalgia experience increased pain with weather changes. Temperature, barometric pressure, humidity, and precipitation all prove to have some effect on the perception of painful or stiff joints.

However, the type of weather that causes the exacerbation of pain is not the same for every patient. One person may find that wet, rainy weather associated with low barometric pressure makes the joints ache while another person hurts worse when the weather becomes hot and dry under the influence of a high pressure sys-

Changes in weather, not a specific type of weather, seem to be the consistent trigger for most people with arthritis.

Research shows that people with back pain have the greatest sensitivity to weather changes followed by people with pain the in arms and wrists. Weather has the weakest effect on people with fibromyalgia or temporomandibular joint (TMJ)

While it may not be scientifically possible to use arthritis pain to predict the weather, some meteorologists use the weather to make the reverse, and likely more helpful prediction regarding the risk of having a flare of pain due to weather

Dear Editor,

A few legislators have been citing the monetary costs of the new Goose Creek Prison; but it sounds more like they are trying to lay a political foundation to later advocate privatization of not only Goose Creek, but also all of Alaska's prisons.

This could explain why some high mucky mucks from G.E.O. had visited some of Alaska's prisons in mid-June. These are the same people (formerly known as Wachenhut) who tried every trick in the book to persuade our legislators to approve a private person at Whittier or Fort Greeley.

I had written Dr. Zoley (the CEO of G.E.O.) twice several months ago to voice an opinion about their current attempts to get a foot in the door. Dr. Zoley never answered either of my letters, which was expected; but I let him know that their clever little secret wasn't so secret.

The last time, it was the families and friends of all of the Alaskan prisoners who had been sent outside to private prisons, who had heard all of the horror stories from their loved ones: who voiced the loudest and bitterest concerns to legislators and state officials.

Saying it Sincerely

Hatred is like acid! Pastor Mike Christian, River of Life Assembly of God Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"For if you forgive men when they sin against you, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if you do not forgive men their sins, your Father will not forgive your sins." ~ Matthew 6:14-15 ~ Living with hatred in your heart is like living in hell. If you're going to live a happy, fulfilling life you must learn how to forgive others. There is a quote that says; "Hate is like an acid: It can damage the vessel in which it is stored as well as the object into which it is poured."

Where does hatred come from? I believe it comes from failing to forgive. Once you store up a hurt in your heart it begins to ferment and spoil into the poison of hatred. Once hatred seizes your spirit you are the victim more than the one you are hating. Hatred will twist your heart, soul and mind until you become a monster of revenge.

Jesus said, "You have heard it was said, 'Love your neighbor and hate your enemy.' But I tell you: Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, that you may be sons of your Father in heaven. He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. If you love those who love you, what reward will you get? Are not even the tax collectors even doing that? And if you greet only your brothers, what are you doing more than others? Do not even the pagans do that? Be perfect, therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect." — Matthew 5:43-48

You can see why we must not hate others, no matter what they may have

First, hatred poisons your own soul. Remember, the acid destroys your vessel as well as the one on which it is poured. Second, if you want to live as God has told you, then you must learn to be generous to your enemies. Man plots revenge but God seeks ways to forgive. Third, your forgiveness will be your greatest witness. When your enemies see that you have chosen to live the way God has told you, they will see and experience for themselves, through your willingness to forgive them, the "Mercy" that God has to offer them. Then you will have the opportunity to share the love of Jesus with them on a more personal level.

Remember: Hatred is an acid that destroys you as well as the one it is poured out on! May the lord of love and forgiveness bless you!

NSEDC kicks off second round of Fishermen's Fairs

Games, food and contests highlight events in Stebbins, St. Michael and Unalakleet and elders lined the room with plates its three southernmost member comheaped tall with food from regional restaurants and bakers.

What might sound like a trip to the state fair was actually a scene played out in three regional gymnasiums in mid-July as Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation delivered the carnival to Stebbins, St. Michael and Unalakleet. The three communities played host to the start of the second round of NSEDC's Fishermen's Fairs.

Featuring food, games and contests, the fairs are celebrations to honor subsistence and commercial fishermen and the work they do to support their community and families. NSEDC completed its first round of hosting fairs in all 15 of its member communities with a final event in Nome in 2009. After a year's break, NSEDC kicked off the second set of fairs with the events in munities on July 12, 13 and 14.

BIG THROW- Gladys Pete of Stebbins shows good form while competing in the anchor toss during the NSEDC Fishermen's Fair in Stebbins, July 12.

For the young—and young at heart—the inflatable games provided the chance to climb, crawl and slide their way through the obstacle course; bounce around the moonhouse; outstretch their opponent in a game of bungee-basketball; and test their best sumo wrestling moves. A prize walk and fish pond gave the youngest fair attendees the chance to come home with a new toy.

An ample supply of food was on hand at each fair including several dozen pizzas from Peace on Earth Pizza in Unalakleet, stacks and stacks of six-foot-long sandwiches from Subway in Nome, fresh fruit, salad and several cakes by Unalakleet's Judie Kotongan.

A highlight of each fair was a set of contests, including a fish-cutting testants were tasked to prepare a salmon for dry fish as fast as they could. The most skilled ulu users were able to ready their fish for hanging in under 30 seconds! Men and women also put their muscles to work, seeing who could throw a 22pound anchor the farthest on dry land. A final race proved the most light-hearted as two teams formed to see who could bounce their way across the course the fastest on a NSEDC plans to continue the Fishermen's Fair tradition in the summers to come as it works its way through a second lap.

DNR to hold offshore lease sale

By Diana Haecker

In a standing-room-only meeting held at the Visitor Center last Friday, Department of Natural Resources mineral property manager Kerwin Krause updated a crowd of more than 30 miners on an upcoming offshore lease sale. Krause announced that the sale is going to be held on September 28 at Old St. Joe's Hall. There will be an outcry auction for tracts near shore divided in 54 tracts, each ranging from less than 40 to 160 acres in size. A sealed bid auction will be held for 35 tracts in waters from 30-foot to 60-foot depth, ranging in size from 200 to a couple of 3.000 acre tracts.

Krause also informed the miners that there would be environmental monitoring requirements. The state, he said, has no benthic concerns in waters 20 feet and shallower. There will be some environmental monitoring in the transition zone between 20- and 30-foot water depth. In waters 30 feet deep and deeper, Krause said, there definitely will be environmental monitoring requirements. He mentioned that WestGold operated offshore dredges in Norton Sound and that they were required to perform baseline studies. The studies cost WestGold about $2.5 million and still contain very useful information for miners today. Krause said the department might go along with the idea of having a mitigation bank that would collect mitigation money from miners operating in 30 feet and deeper. Krause said an amount of $2,000 per disturbed acre is still an accurate number for monitoring requirements. "If you decide to mine and disturb an acre, yes, you may have to pay that amount," Krause said. A miner from Alabama said that in his state, the "mitigation fund" is considered to be another form of a bribe to be left alone, but Krause assured him that the money would be used to fund monitoring and biological work.

Krause also said that a South African mining company named Aurumar, an affiliate of mining corporations Debeers and AngloGold Ashanti, has shown interest to mine in the deeper waters of Norton

USPS contemplates closure of 36 post offices in Alaska

By Diana Haecker

The United States Post Office released a list last week with 3,653 post offices nationwide that will be studied for closure or relocation. Thirty-six post offices in Alaska are on that list, including the post offices in Wales and White

Mountair

Ernie Swanson, communications programs specialist with the USPS explained that the postal mail service has been losing mail volume for years and is losing money to the tune of $23 million per day. The computer-generated list titled "Expanded Access Study list" was drawn up at the USPS headquarters in Washington, D.C. using criteria that looked at short business hours, small mail volume and little foot traffic.

Swanson said that the Anchorage District of fice is going to evaluate if it is feasible to close these offices. "Now it is up to post office management in Alaska to see if in fact it is a good idea to close these offices," Swanson said. He also said that there would be questionnaires first stages of starting placer mining operations at Monroeville, says Robert Salna, the primary investor of Nome Gold Alaska Corporation.

Placer mining operations set to begin near old Camp #5

Salna said that management is in place with Jeff Keener of Fairbanks as the manager of exploration, Keith Tryck as financial manager located in Anchorage and operations manager Barry Clay in Nome. Nome Gold bought mining equipment from Quality Rubber, a recreational mining outfit that mined at Ouarz Creek. "We needed excavators, bulldozers and now we're trying to buy trucks," said Salna. Two big wash plants have been also added to their inventory list, and Salna said the company can start minor operations in the next couple of weeks.

Salna said that the construction of the new Norton Sound Health Corporation hospital has tied up a lot of skilled labor work force and heavy equipment. "We're still trying to hire equipment operators," Salna said. "There are some qualified people here, but they are working on the hospital." He added that it is also hard to find accommodations since the hospital is taking up most of Nome's rental apartments and houses. "We won't be operating in full force until next year," he said.

Salna said that they are looking to hire a dozen people and will eventually need 30 workers to operate the placer mine. He said their mine would be on a footprint of 10 acres, with five acres mined and the other five used to pile up the peeled tundra and overburden. Eventually, he said, the company would like to purchase a Rainier Skyline excavator, a system capable of moving 1,500 tons of earth per hour, according to the excavator's website.

Salna explained that high grade gold had been mined out and that this requires a lot of earth being moved to get to the remainder of the gold and to take advantage of the high gold prices.

Salna is the main investor in the newly formed Nome Gold Alaska company. He is also president and CEO of the Canadian company Dover Investments with a few hold-

Letters -

Dear Editor,

I read your article about Larry's Auto's trouble with the City of Nome over disputed parking. In that article I understand the City is willing to go to a jury trial over a $5,000 bill. A jury lawyer costs at least $200 per hour, and a jury trial will take many, many hours. So the City will have to pay a lawyer well over the contested $5,000 bill.

The City is low on money and so is raising property taxes. I am willing to pay the increased taxes for the library, schools and Rec Center, but I do not want to pay attorney fees for a seemingly ridiculous lawsuit.

I have parked many times in the area the City is arguing about. There is no sign saying not to park there or common sense reason not to park there. It seems to me the City will lose their case against Larry's even as they loose thousands of taxpayer dollars.

I was born in Nome on June 17, 1933 to Emil Jorgensen and Nora Nahata. We lived in a very small cabin that was next to a large storage building where Santa's sleigh was stored and real close to the railroad that was from the Power Plant to the dock. We Native kids played on that rail. Of course, we got off when the train would come. Some day I hope to spend several days in Nome and reminisce about those days. Sincerely,

Recently we phoned an order for a hot water heater to a Home Depot store in Anchorage to be delivered to Nome by air. Upon arrival, the ticket had a charge for Nome city sales tax of 5 percent. We were told the sales tax was automatic since Nome has a sales tax. We called Nome city hall to inquire if the "out of city point of sale" sales tax was a new policy and were assured it was not. If not, who is receiving the tax money being col-

Photos by Sandra L. Medearis UP, UP AND AWAY - Fuel at the Crowley pumps has gone up half a dollar, for now less than the $2 jump in gas price rumored to arrive at all pumps in Nome when the first barges come over the horizon.

FIVE DOLLARS AND HOLD-ING-Monday afternoon the Bonanza Express gasoline price remained the same – $4.99 per gallon and the same for diesel fuel at

Fuel up; waiting for the other shoe to drop

By Sandra L. Medearis

The low grumble shaking the ground on dread fuel prices to come should fade but not entirely as some information became available last week.

The fuel surcharge on electric costs is poised to go up, and gas prices are heading that direction.

Fuel to keep the lights on and televised sports playing in Nome's living rooms came off the barge and across the dock more expensive than last year's cost.

Last year's fuel supply for utility generators cost $2.562, compared to the recent delivery at $3.4132 per gallon, according to Nome Joint Utility System's manager, John K. Handeland

"Based on the computations we have in place and the price we end up with, it does call for an increase in the surcharge, but to the extent we can maintain it close to the present level is our goal," Handeland said. "The board of directors and the staff of NJUS do have to live here too."

Any setting of the fuel surcharge that applies to each kwh consumed will not happen until NJUS staff takes inventory on fuel left from last season. The fuel cost that is operational in computing the rise in cost each season at NJUS results from a rolling average of new fuel combined with the cost of fuel left in the storage tanks; last year's 2010 price resulted from averaging in 2009 fuel remaining in the tanks. Likewise, the surcharge will be computed on the cost of the recent 1.6-gallon delivery with the approximate 1 million gallons already on hand.

"We expect that the actual net cost increase would turn out to be less than 85 cents per gallon," Handeland said.

Crowley's freshly-stenciled gas sign at the pumps by AC Store showed $5.44 cents a gallon last week, up by about 49 cents, but customers who fueled up over the weekend enjoyed the old price as the pumps registered the old price of $4.95 on credit card receipts until mid-day Monday. The smallest fuel delivery by Crowley to a home, 0 to 99 gallons, has gone to $5.8359 per gallon, compared with the previous price of $5.2406 including sales tax. Crowley staff confirmed the new prices Friday.

The Bonanza Express at Seppala Drive and Bering Street showed the same $4.99 per gallon for gasoline Monday. For fuel oil, Bonanza staff quoted $4.60 per gallon. Staff did not have information on how long prices would hold at either vendor.

Handeland noted that oil prices are still volatile. A price check on May 25 and June 25 showed a 50cent difference on those two days; the July 25 price showed a 20-cent difference, he said.

In other words, the price of fuel in Western Alaska is a developing story.

Kelso goes for fluoride tooth and nail

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council met July 27 to pass several ordinances into second reading and final passage at its next regular meeting Aug. 8. At the close of the July meeting, a work session with the Carrie M McLain Museum commission ensued.

During a public comment period a soon-tobe and always-has-been hot button topic emerged.

Local dentist Mark Kelso noted, in his estimation, the serious situation where the utility fluoridation mechanism had not been working for a month. Kelso cited the support of a buddy, Troy Ritter, an environmental health consultant at Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium in backing continued fluoridation of Nome's water supply. The Nome Joint Utility Board has directed its manager, John K. Handeland to draw up a resolution calling for a halt to fluoridation to be presented to the Council for approval. Utility board members Fred Moody and Carl Emmons have been vocal in calling for an end to fluoridation.

Ask Moody about fluoride: "I don't even know why they have to think about it. It is poison," Moody will say. Emmons feels that kids

Port Commission wants boats out of the harbor by winter

By Diana Haecker

Port commissioners Jeff Darling, Jim West Jr., Charlie Lean, Jimmy Adams and Cam Kristenson spent the better part of the port meeting last week discussing a potential new rule that would require every vessel out of the harbor waters before winter. Boats that over-wintered in the port, like the Point Barrow have created problems with torn up fenders that need costly replacement.

Also, boats that are left in the harbor overwinter suffer greatly from abrasive ice movement and create environmental hazards. "We should make abundantly clear that vessels that stay in the water do not fare well in the winter," Cam Kristenson said. This is the case with a sunken vessel owned by Mike Benchoff. The 99 cent Romance has periodically leaked oil into the harbor since January and harbormaster Joy Baker said that there seems to be no resolution of either getting fines paid or the vessel removed.

Baker said in a letter to Benchoff that the situation must come to an end and gave him until July 1 to haul out the 99 cent Romance, clean up the sheet pile wall and the spill booms loaned to Benchoff by the city. According to city manager and harbormaster, Benchoff still owes the port more than $7,700 for past due balance and cleanup costs and fines. As of the port meeting, the vessel and a tugboat were still in their place on the short wall of the harbor.

In other business Baker reported that a consultant visited Nome last week to take a look at the fenders. Sandra Morris with PND engineering submitted cost estimates to the tune of $1.3 million for fender replacement on the east wall and $1.7 million for fender replacement on the south wall. City Manager Josie Bahnke said that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities has a harbor grant program that the city could apply for, but the program requires a 50 percent match of other funding. The Commissioners decided to apply for the DOT harbor fender grant and passed a motion to that effect. Mulling how to come up with the 50 percent match, Bahnke informed the commissioners that there are $2.45 million in an unrestricted account for the port and $4.4 million in two restricted accounts that are used to pay back the NOAA loan and for causeway maintenance.

Josie Bahnke said in her report that Nome saw in the last few weeks visitors associated with the Arctic Imperative workshop and the Northern Waters Task Force that were specifically interested in the port. These are indicators of busier times ahead, Bahnke said.

She informed the commission that the city council contemplates to expand the number of commissioners on the port commission. She wanted the blessing of the port commission before it went into first reading before the city council the next day. The five port commissioners are appointed by the mayor and confirmed by the city council.

The commissioners had no objection to that.

Commission chair Jim West Jr. said he sees more commissioners as an opportunity for more input and more variety in opinion. West Jr. made the motion to increase the number of port commissioners from five to seven. The motion carried. The Nome Common Council took up the issue the following day.

ings in Nome toward Sunset. Salna said an offshore corporation by the name of Indigo Gold Corporation has also invested in the Nome Gold Alaska Corp.

Salna said the Nome Gold, which has inherited more than just alluvial gold properties from Alaska Gold Co./NovaGold Resources, will continue to lease land to dog mushers off Little Creek Road. Nome Gold Alaska Corp. also will allow camping on their property on West Beach, charging $200 per season and a $200 clean up deposit. Salna said there are no plans to get into the gravel business as they have signed a non-competition agreement with NovaGold Resources in regard to gravel sales.

"Our intentions are to maximize the mine life potential of 40 years on the land that we bought," said Salna. "We hope to be operating for the next 40 years and bring some employment to the region.

sent out to the affected communities for public input on the proposal to close the offices and public meetings to be held with presentations on how mail delivery would work.

'This is not a done deal by all means," Swanson said. He said that if a certain post office were to close, the USPS would contract with a commercial establishment in that particular town to provide mailboxes and other mail services. Swanson said shutdowns would not occur until 2012. He also added that Alaska has to be looked at with different criteria in mind, as low foot traffic and small mail volume is to be expected for rural communities.

Swanson said that the post office is required by law to provide postal service but since the Postal Reorganization Act in the mid 1970s, there are no government subsidies to keep the post office afloat. "We had to survive on our own revenue and did so for more than 25 years," Swanson said. Then came the Internet age, high gas prices and lately the economic downturn and the mail business slid into the red numbers

Proposals to save money included changes to the bypass mail, but the Alaska Congressional delegation met with Postmaster General Patrick Donahoe, and he made the commitment to continue the bypass mail system. Another change proposed was to eliminate mail delivery on Saturdays. "We could save $3.5 billion per year if we didn't have to deliver on Saturdays," Swanson said. Congress so far has not acted on a bill that would do away with Saturday delivery.

Other post offices on the potential closure list are Anvik, Crooked Creek, Ekwok, Kaltag, Kobuk, Koyukuk, Red Devil, Shageluk, Skwentna and Stevens Village.

Photos by Diana Haecker LOOK AT THAT DISTRICT— During last week's constituent meeting in Nome, Rep. Neal Foster showed the current redistricting map that extends his district to 68 communities.

Foster, Olson give legislative update

Alcoholism, suicide prevention and high energy costs top list of constituent concerns

By Diana Haecker

A dozen Nomeites showed up for an update with State House Representative Neal Foster and Senator Donnie Olson during the mid-day constituent meet-and-greet held at the Mini Convention Center on July 26. The legislators spoke about the redistricting map, the failed coastal zone management program extension, high energy costs, suicide prevention and state investments like the proposed $4.5 billion Susitna Hydro project and the road to Nome. Note please, Neal Foster said, Governor Sean Parnell wants it to be known that it's not a road to Nome, but that his interest is in developing roads for resource developers.

The new redistricting map turned House District 39 into the geographically biggest district covering an area from St. Lawrence Island all the way east to the Canadian border and southeast to Tok and McCarthy. The district swells from 28 communities to 68. Foster said that over about 30 years the district has been made up of predominantly Inupiat and Yupik cultures. "Those paired groups are now severed and we have to pair up now with interior Athabascans," said Foster.

All things considered, Foster said, the good thing is that the house district remains rural as there were maps that considered lumping the Bering Strait region in with Fairbanks suburbs. Olson also mentioned that the failed ballot measure 1 to expand the number of legislators from 40 to 44 might get another push. When discussing the lawsuits that were filed to challenge the redistricting map, Foster and Olson put the situation in perspective saying that while not ideal, other maps could be worse. "There is only one scenario that's better, but many, many others that are worse," Foster said. Donny Olson added that it is even more important than ever to get constituents out to vote.

Foster addressed the state's projection of declining oil revenue and the increase in costs to run the state. The state's capital budget for FY 2012 totals $3.2 billion. This district was appropriated $72.4 million with Nome getting a bit more than $22 million, which includes $14 million for the construction of a new museum named the Richard Foster Building. The operating budget totals $9 billion for the state, including $273,000 for Nome in revenue shares, $400 million for the Power Cost Equalization endowment and $13 million for the VPSO program and $1.1 billion forward funding education.

Discussions quickly turned to how to solve the dilemma of the state depending on the finite amount of oil to fund its operations. There is the idea of an endowment, Foster said, that would horde money for the future when there is no more oil running through TAPS. But that, he said, would be a self-fulfilling prophecy that would not solve the problem of declining revenue and increasing government cost in the long run. And then there was the Governor's idea of cutting the oil companies' taxes. Foster said that the idea behind House bill 108 was to give oil developers an incentive to explore for more oil, but there was no assurance given that oil companies actually would commit to more development. Foster said he voted for the bill to get it out of the House and into the Senate, where it died. Sen. Olson added that when the bill came before the Senate, no oil executives came to Juneau to testify. That looked sketchy to us," he said.

Constituents asked Foster why rural Alaska still has to fight tooth and nail to offset the high costs of energy while the railbelt gets a multibillion dollar hydro power plant and a dam built. Foster said that two thirds of the Alaska population lives on the road system and he explained, "when the tide rises, all ships would go up." He responded that it is only fair that the population centers see their fair share of funds, but he also hopes that as the railbelt saves energy costs, the state could allocate money to rural areas to offset high energy costs in bush Alaska. He pointed to the fully funded weatherization and energy rebate programs as well as the PCE program.

Jim Stimpfle inquired if there are movements afoot to allow net-metering in Alaska. "You'll never bring down energy costs with the PCE," Stimpfle said. Foster said that Rep. Kurt Olson (R-Kenai) introduced House Bill 37 that would allow gridtied customers who generate electricity from renewable resources to receive credit from their utility for the excess power they generate beyond what they consume.

Another question was about the projected increase in maritime transport in the Bering Strait and yet no money to speak of is allocated for a harbor at Little Diomede? Neal Foster agreed that the funds thrown at the southeastern marine highway system dwarf the amount of money that Diomede gets for reliable transportation.

Addressing suicide, Foster spoke about his experience of traveling to Hooper Bay and St. Michael to hear suggestions for suicide prevention. While Foster was in St. Michael, a young man killed himself. Foster said that it was horrible to feel the loss and to see everybody in the village suffer. Foster said he had a conversation with the Governor and told him that suicide prevention can't be the "soup of the day."

Foster said he secured funding for a culturally based and holistic suicide prevention called "Qungasvik." Alcoholism, suicide, sexual abuse and child abuse are all connected, commented Melanie Bahnke, vice-president at Kawerak Inc. She said that although western Alaska has the highest rate of sexual abuse, yet abuse prevention programs are the lowest funded in the state of Alaska. Bahnke added the need for an alcohol treatment center and for VPSO holding cells.

Norton Sound Health Corp. president and CEO Carol Piscoya said that NSHC is contemplating accommodating a sobering center in the old hospital once the move to the new hospital site is complete.

In closing, Foster recapped that suicide prevention solutions must be tailored to each community. The same holds true for solutions to bring down energy costs, through a combination of weatherization, renewable energy production, PCE and programs like RuRALCAP's Energy Wise program.

Regarding the Western Access Study — a.k.a. Road to Nome — Governor Parnell so far has approved $1.25 million for studies. So far, a road that would access mining districts, and eventually end up in Nome, would cost $3 to $5 billion. Foster said that in talks with Parnell, it became clear that the governor does not see this as a road to Nome, but a road to resources with special interest to access the Ambler mining district. NovaGold Resources Inc.

owns a copper-zinc-gold-silver property of more than 90,000 acres of patented state of Alaska and BLM mining claims in the Ambler district. NovaGold was the recipient of the first completed road to resources, the new Glacier Creek Road leading to their now idle mine at Rock Creek.

Foster said that he received mixed messages from the community, some opposed to have a road lead to Nome and some in favor of it.

In conclusion, he said, more meaningful community input is needed

Weight-bearing exercise lowers risk of many diseases

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Weight-bearing activities may provide protection against many common ailments including diabetes mellitus, obesity, osteoporosis, and joint injuries. This is important for everyone, including those who may focus on aerobic cardiovascular exercises like running, swimming, or walking but avoid activities that strengthen skeletal muscle like weight lifting or physical labor.

Last year, researchers from the University of California Los Angeles reported the findings from a study showing that low muscle mass, called sarcopenia, was associated with an increased risk of type II diabetes. Obesity is a known risk factor for type II diabetes. The UCLA study of over 14,000 obese and nonobese individuals found that low muscle mass increased a person's risk for high blood sugars, even in people who are thin. The greatest risk was found in people who are obese (BMI > 30) and have a low muscle mass.

Further research suggests that people with diabetes and those hoping to avoid diabetes should mix aerobic activity with weight bearing exercises for optimum protection.

Muscle building also helps with weight loss because muscle cells burn 10 times the number of calories that fat cells burn, even while at rest. Therefore muscle-strengthening exercises that build muscle mass have a long-lasting effect by promoting weight loss long after a person has finished exercising.

For those at risk, weight-bearing exercises protect against the bonewasting effects of osteoporosis. Osteoporosis occurs when a person's bones have lost too much calcium. Bones, just like muscles, become stronger with use. The phrase "use it or lose it" applies to muscles and bones alike. This is because the human body responds to increased stress on a bone by laying down more calcium in the bone. Therefore adding weight training to regular exercise over time will make the bone

Regular weight training, when combined with range-of-motion (stretching) and aerobic activity, helps to strengthen joints. This is because most skeletal muscles cross a joint, and a strong muscle group acts like an internal brace for the joint that the muscle crosses. ALASKA For example, the knee can FAMILY be made more stable DOCTOR by strengthening thigh muscles that cross and move the knee joint. This is why weight-bearing exercises are an important part of preventing joint sprains or rehabilitating a joint after an injury.

Weight training does not require excessive amounts of weight to be effective. Often beginning with five to 10 pounds of weight for basic exercises is sufficient to build muscle. Beginners should seek the help of a trainer or reliable training video to learn proper techniques and avoid in-

Weight-bearing exercise is most effective when combined with aerobic activities like walking, running, or elliptical training. Doctors think of weight-bearing exercise and aerobic exercise as complementary activities. Weight training and aerobic activity is like having both a rod and reel for fishing. You can get by with just one or the other, but having both just works better. Mixing aerobic activity and weight bearing exercise provides maximum health benefits for protection against many common get enough fluoride in their diet, say from naturally occurring fluoride or in water used to manufacture soda pop.

The City of Fairbanks stopped fluoridation July 1after 50 years, following a task force study of the issue. Juneau ceased fluoridation in January 2007. Opponents of fluoridation say they are being asked to drink water that contains poison with no control over how much is ingested and that it harms rather than hurts youngsters' teeth.

Kelso asserted that the Council should "send that resolution back to Nome Joint Utility." A check with Handeland revealed that no resolution has been sent to the Council from NJUS as yet.

Kelso said when one compares Nome teeth to villagers' where fluoridation is not available; the difference is "night and day."

As for the Fairbanks study, Kelso said that as soon as fluoridation comes up for a vote, the anti-fluoridation people come out with pseudoscientific arguments against it.

"That hysteria often trumps science," Kelso told the Council. Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked Kelso to provide the Council with documented studies concerning his point of view.

The state Dept. of Health and Social Services has advised a reduction in the amount of fluoride used in water supplies partly based on the amount of fluoride naturally present in water sources. According to Kelso, the amount of fluoride naturally occurring in Nome's supply is

ANTHC would supply equipment and instrumentation to get fluoride back into Nome's water, according to

Last week Handeland said that NJUS would be contracting an independent study to verify the amount of fluoride naturally occurring in water from Moonlight Springs. A recent in-house sampling confirmed levels of naturally occurring fluoride at .02 mg/l. levels recommended by the EPA but not the formally adopted range between 0.03 mg/l to .07 mh/l. Adding fluoride to the Nome water system costs about $25,000 for product annually, plus the cost of extra rounds to monitor levels and costs to plow the road to the facility. The issue will come up again at the NJUS regular board meeting on Aug. 16.

The agenda included the following Council actions:

- Voted an ordinance into second reading to approve the City's purchase of two lots at Port of Nome from Alaska Gold for the price of $85,000.
- Voted an ordinance into second reading and final passage to increase the membership of the Port Commission from five to seven members and to set the terms for three years. The Council got into a flap recently with Mayor Denise Michels when they appointed John Bahnke and Jeff Darling to the Commission, contrary to Michels' intent to appoint Darling and Jimmy Adams. The mayor vetoed Bahnke's appointment. The Council then gave Adams the nod.
- · Passed a resolution designating water and sewer infrastructure improvements to the Sclaircore system as the community's number one priority for state funding.
- Passed a resolution honoring the achievements of Nome resident Marjorie Tungwenuk Tahbone in being named Miss Indian World.
- Passed a resolution authorizing the City to apply for and participate in a state DOT grant to pay for replacing harbor fenders.
- Set a date of Aug. 31 at 7 p.m. for a hearing on derelict structures targeted for abatement-removal or remedy. Owners will be formally notified.
- · Heard Mary Knodel ask the City administration to enforce numbering of houses for easy identification by fire and ambulance crews. Otherwise, the City would apply numbers and add a fee to the tax bills.

END OF SEASON CATCH – Harry Muktoyuk and Napolion Bergamaschi work hard moving live crab into a holding tank. Crabbing season came to an end on Saturday.

NOME RIVER WEIR—The cumulative counts of salmon species through July 29 at the Nome River weir were 7 kings, 2,743 chums, 7,192 pinks, 1 sockeye and 10 silvers. Salmon escapement goals at the weir are 2,900-4,300 chums and 3,150 pinks (odd-numbered year). The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game operates the weir with assistance from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

Whopping king crab deliveries bring Norton Sound season to early close

By Jim Menard Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game

The Norton Sound red king crab fishery is ending earlier than any year since the fishery went super-exclusive in 1994, resulting in a small boat fishery. Approximately 322,000 pounds of the 331,150 pound quota in the open access fishery had been delivered through July 29. The guideline harvest level was set at 9 percent this year, but with about 20 boats still to deliver, the final harvest tally is likely to hit 10 percent of the estimated legal male biomass.

Crab fishermen had an amazing year, and the ex-vessel value of the fishery will easily surpass last year's $1.6 million. Congratulations to the crab fleet and kudos to the plant workers at Norton Sound Seafood Products for handling the unprecedented crab loads delivered this year.

Weather was again a factor in fishing decisions last week. A storm that peaked on July 29 prevented most fishermen from getting out to their crab pots, so the department extended the crab season by 30 hours to allow fishermen one last chance to get on the water and get the crab.

Salmon at mid-season

The first half of the salmon season is drawing to a close with another great run of chum salmon. Pinks are coming on late for an odd-numbered year and weaker than expected.

Chinook and sockeye runs were weak as expected, and the silver run is starting out as mediocre.

The commercial salmon catch for Norton Sound through July 29 totals 123 kings, 244 sockeye, 96,001 chums, 6,847 pinks and 4,358 silvers. The chum catch is trailing last year's harvest, but is the second best catch in more than 20 years. The silver salmon harvest is below average (although it's still early) and tracking similar to last year for late July. Pinks made a late showing in the south. Both pinks and silvers spend one year in the ocean, so the hope is that the silvers are just a little late too.

Kotzebue district

The first three weeks of commercial fishing in the Kotzebue district produced the best effort and catches since 1995. The cumulative catch is 113,000 chums for 75 permit holders. Permit holders who haven't participated since the 1990s have been fishing this season. Fishing should peak this week, but Kotzebue's main runway was closed from 9 p.m. July 31 to 6 a.m. Aug. 3, and will be closed from 9 p.m. Aug. 4 to 6 a.m. Aug. 7. The buyer has not yet determined when they will buy fish again. However, an opening was expected sometime Tuesday evening, Aug. 2 to take advantage of the main runway opening on Wednesday morning.

Nomeites celebrate Miss Indian World

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

The sight of colorful kuskpuks, the aroma of delicious home-made food and the beat of Eskimo drumming filled the Nome Rec Center last Friday in honor of Miss Indian World, Marjorie Tahbone. The 22-year-old Nomeite of Inupiaq and Kiowa descent was crowned Miss Indian World at the Gathering of Nations powwow in Albuquerque, New Mex-

Wearing the delicately beaded sash and the Miss Indian World crown — at four pounds it's not a light garment — Tahbone greeted the stream of visitors and posed for photos with Nomeites.

The potluck table sagged under the weight of fish dishes, salads, berries, muktuk, and various other Native foods.

A Native Youth Olympics participant and winner of this year's WEIO fish cutting and grease pole, Tahbone emceed a demonstration of other NYO games by coach Hank Irelan's team Jens Irelan, Asaaluk Irelan, Kyle Clark and Andrea Irrigoo.

The King Island dance group performed and dignitaries with Sitnasuak, Bering Straits Native Corporation, Kawerak and Nome Eskimo Community honored Tahbone with speeches.

A silent auction with desserts, cakes, ivory carvings and a qiviut head scarf was held as well. Donations at the event were collected to help Tahbone offset the cost of traveling in her capacity of Miss Indian World. She said she wanted to travel within Alaska but that the pageant organizers do not pay for travel within the winner's home state. "They will fly me London and back, but not to Anchorage," she said, laughing.

Ingeborg Tonette Sinnes Handeland

Our beloved Mother, Ingeborg Tonette Sinnes Handeland, died in the evening of July 16. She knew there was a better home waiting for her when her life on Earth was done and was at peace knowing she would soon be with Jesus.

She was born in the rural farming community of Kveven, Norway on April 5, 1923, the second child in a family of seven children. When she was six, her father moved the family to America to try to make a better life for the family. They settled in a rural area near Bellingham, Washington. However, her mother became homesick for Norway and the family moved back to settle on a farm when she was nine.

She had one older brother and five younger siblings whom she helped to take care of when her mother became ill. She has been blessed to have her youngest sister, Erna, living here in Nome for over 40 years.

Ingeborg lived through the invasion of Norway by the Nazis in the 40s. She said the Nazis would take and do whatever they wanted. It was a proud moment to see the Norwegian flag raised again and the singing of the Norwegian national anthem.

Her husband, Kai, was raised in a neighboring town in Norway. He had been working in America, but went to Norway to propose to her. She met back up with him in Nome in June of 1953 after crossing the Atlantic by boat, traveling cross-country by train to Seattle and then by plane to Nome. As she was landing in Nome, she looked down and saw brown cows on the tundra. It gave her a sense of familiarity that was shattered by the realization that these "cows" were actually rusty old barrels on the tundra.

They were married in the Methodist Church on June 6, 1953. Their church, Our Savior Lutheran Church had not been built yet, but when it later was, Mother and Dad were instrumental in the construction of the church and were faithful lifetime members.

They immediately set out for Kougarok where they mined that summer. It was not easy work and they decided to move permanently into town. Kai worked for Alaska Gold and for the City of Nome in the power plant. Ingeborg worked for various people in town and later became a well-loved babysitter to many children.

She considered her friends to be her hobby. She always had a cup of coffee and cookie available as well as some good conversation. She had so many wonderful friends who cherished her as much as she cherished them.

After Kai died in 1987, she stopped babysitting. She concentrated on her expanding family starting in the early 90s and adored her five grandchildren.

Ingeborg loved to travel with trips to all corners of America, Canada, Mexico and Norway. She also enjoyed friends, knitting, crocheting, going to camp, picking berries, cooking for her family, starting plants and tending to her garden.

She loved Nome and the people of Nome. Whenever she was asked if she'd ever move back to Norway, she would reply that Nome was a good place to live and she didn't want to leave it.

Ingeborg went into the hospital on July 3. She had many kind doctors and nurses who took care of her, especially Dr. O'Neill who was just so wonderful in her care of Ingeborg. She was at peace and resting when she passed away there on the 16th.

She is survived by her son John, son Arne and daughter-in-law Dana, and their children Donald Kai, Diana Louise and Erik Jens, daughter Linda and son-in-law Jerry and their kids Lauren Elisabeth and Mark Christian, sister Erna and brother-inlaw Leo, and their daughter Amanda and her children Elise, Brandon and Karl Cody, and daughter Kristina and her husband Josh and their son Tylar. Also, she leaves in Norway, sister-in-law Ingjerd, brothers Thom (Froydis), Jarleiv (Karen), Kjell (Berit) and sister Karen (Reidar) and many nieces and nephews.

She was preceded in death by Kai (Kay), her loving husband of 34 years, her parents, Aadne and Amanda Sinnes, brother Sven Sinnes and infant sons, John and Anton.

Caleb Pungowiyi

Alaska Native leader Caleb Pungowiyi, 69, died July 26 after a battle with cancer. He was surrounded by his family in his Wasilla home. Pungowiyi was born and raised on St. Lawrence Island in the village of Savoonga. He is survived by his loving wife Gladys, nine children (Cherissa Weiland, Daphne Tocktoo, Corina Kramer, Cana Crosby, Shayne Schaeffer, Spring Parnell, Marilyn Pungowiyi, Luke Pungowiyi and Henry Pungowiyi), 24 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

"Alaska lost a wonderful leader, guide, mentor, and friend," said longtime family friend Henry Huntington of the Pew Environment Group. "Caleb's humor, humility, intelligence, insight, and accomplishments were and are an inspiration for the many that had the privilege of knowing him. As we mourn his loss and grieve with his family, may we also celebrate his life and legacy, remembering that no matter how much we can do by ourselves, we can do much more when we work and laugh with one another."

Pungowiyi was a former President and CEO of the Inuit Circumpolar Council and of Kawerak, Inc. At the time of his death he was employed as a senior advisor with Oceana. He was a strong advocate for incorporation of traditional knowledge into policy and protection of subsistence resources and the way-of-life for Alaska Native people. Pungowiyi lived a life of service and was a member of many boards and committees including: the National Science Foundation Office of Polar Programs Advisory Committee, Marine Mammal Commission's Special Advisor on Native Affairs, Inuit Circumpolar Conference Executive Council, the Steering Committee of the Alaska Native Science Commission, the Polar Research Board Committee on Bering Sea Ecosystems, the Advisory Panel on Arctic Impacts from Soviet Nuclear Contamination, the Native American Rights Fund, the Alaska Coastal Policy Council, the Bering Sea Impact Study (a subcommittee of the International Arctic Science Committee). the Arctic Research Consortium of the U.S., and the Alaska Conservation Foundation.

A funeral service was held July 30 at the First Baptist Church of Anchorage.

Linne W. Rose

Linne Warren Rose was born May 6, 1921 to Linne Wilford and Eva Marion (Wiederhold) Rose in Seattle, Washington and died at the age of 90, on June 28, 2011, at home in Nome.

A perfectionist, stickler, and uncompromising or meticulous worker are words that describe Linne's work and cultural ethics as he lived, set, and accomplished his goals in life.

Linne enlisted in the United States Navy in May 1943 and reenlisted in 1946. During his Navy service, Linne was an instructor, teaching fellow mates the use of the lathe, drill presses, benchwork, layout work, and tool making. Linne was honorably discharged, with the rank of Machinist's Mate Second Class, in August of 1951. Linne received the American Area Campaign Medal and the World War II Victory Medal for his service to his country. At the time of his death he was an active member of the local American Legion Post 9569.

Linne earned his living with his sharp mind and able hands. He used his mechanic, machinist and Navy skills throughout his life in a variety of jobs: bicycle shop owner and operator; Washington Iron Works as a machinist; Northern Commercial Company as a tugboat and barge captain; Lomen's as a superintendent of barge and freight operations; Alaska Cab Garage as head mechanic; as a commercial salmon permit holder with his wife Lilly, he commercial fished for salmon off the beach of Nome; and as shop foreman for Alaska Gold Company from which he retired in 1995

Linne was fortunate to have fallen in love three times: he married Margaret, who he shared his love with son Linne, Jr.; Betty, who he shared his love with sons Rex and Rene'; and Lilly, who he spent his remaining years with and shared his love with children Kathy, Karen, Sandy and Joel.

Within his Navy personnel records, auto racing was stated as Linne's "leisure time" Leisure is not the description one could apply to the deep, if not obsessive, passion he had for hard top auto racing. Linne was one of the pioneers of modern auto racing, and a member of the Golden Wheels Club, Auto Racing Pathfinders - and a legend of Seattle's old Aurora Speedway. As a racer, he set numerous speed records and amassed many titles and trophies, including Seattle-Tacoma Regional Hard Top Auto Racing Champion. An old Seattle newspaper clipping with his photo bears the caption "Linne Rose, Hard Top Ace, Gets Race Tips By Special Radio.'

However, there were many activities that Linne enjoyed that could be labeled as leisure time activities: picking the cleanest blueberries; cooking up the best pot of beans; creating ships with string art; making furniture; picture puzzling; and generally fixing everything that was broken or broke down for family, friends, community members and those tourist marooned on the Nome-Council Road. He truly enjoyed helping people, because it gave him ample opportunity to visit and share his stories.

Linne had much to give to his family and community. He was a member of the Bering Sea Lions Club and received a lifetime membership for his dedicated service. In 2010, he received bib number one for the Bering Sea Lions Club Nome-Golovin-Nome Snowmachine Race. He was a devoted Seattle Seahawks fan, never missing a game, proudly wearing his official NFL Seahawks jacket.

He loved fishing, sharing and passing on his exceptional fishing knowledge to his wife, Lilly, his children and grandchildren. Many in the community looked forward to receiving freshly caught fish from Linne; he made sure the drying racks, frying pan and freezers were full and everyone that needed fish, got fish.

In 1967 Linne received his student pilot certificate, but due to other obligations was unable to receive his pilot's license. He regretted not being able to complete this personal goal. At his request, his remains will be scattered over the Bering Sea by bush plane.

Linne W. Rose is survived by his wife, Lillian; sons Linne (Sandy) Rose, Rex Hall, Rene' (Kathy) Rose and Joel (Monica) Rose; daughters Kathy Holmes, Karen (Jeff) Hadley, and Sandy (Carleton) Tahbone; also many cousins, nephews, nieces, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. He was preceded in death by parents Linne and Eva Rose; brother Royal Rose; mother and father inlaw Louis and Adele Tungwenuk; infant daughter Baby Rose; and granddaughter Adele Tungwenuk

A celebration of life service was held in Nome July 26 at the Our Savior Lutheran Church.

Lawrence Paul Martin

Lawrence Paul Martin II

Nov. 11, 1986 - July 2, 2011 When someone close to us is taken from us suddenly, the pain sometimes seems more than we can bear. And yet, with time, our memories grow more precious, and we come to realize that those we loved live within our hearts.

No one knows the ways of eternity or understanding when those we love leave this earth too soon, before we are ready to say goodbye. But you can be sure of this; that you are in the thoughts of those who care for you. We will miss you always and forever.

Lawrence Paul Martin II was born on November 11, 1986, in Bethel to Lawrence Paul Martin I, and Christine Gladys Martin. The middle of seven siblings, Lawrence was known as JumJum. He was a very outspoken person, and always happy to help family and friends. He loved and took pride in his only daughter, Jacintha Helen Tom. Very active in sports, he loved wrestling and basketball. Lawrence was a very hard worker; he started working as a processor in Nome, and moved up to crabbing on a vessel. Folks enjoyed his company, as he was always there to lend a helping hand when needed. He made sure folks were OK. Well known in his hometown Stebbins, he was a very handsome, strong young man. Lawrence has touched the lives of many family and friends, and all will miss him dearly.

Lawrence's young life was unexpectedly ended July 2. He joins his grandparents, uncle, and niece: Vincent and Alice Martin, John J. Martin, and Avril Martin.

Lawrence Paul Martin II is survived by his loving family Lawrence P. Martin I, Christine G. Martin, Seth Aparezuk, Louise Martin, Letia Martin, Richard Martin, Vincent Martin, Leroy Martin, Philomena Martin. Grandparents Joseph and Martina Aparezuk and family; nephews Iven Hayden, Cylas. Nieces Shalaeya, LeAnna, Imagin, Kibbie, Minasuri, and Coraline, Shea, Renee, Deion, Serena, Murial, Tyhera, Ava. Cousins Stacey O., Anna Nashoanak, Vincent, Homer, Bridgette, Heather, Allison, Troy, Shirley E., Elizabeth A., John M. II.; Bonnie, Jacintha, John V. M., Timothy M. Uncles and Aunts Peter Sr. and Jr., Anna Matthias Sr., Bridgette Bryd, Ralph Martin, Hermis and Winnie Aparezuk, Hilda, Clyde Stern, Sally, Tessie, and Rachel, and many more.

Mary H. Pete

Oct. 11, 1954-July 14, 2011

Mary H. "Dallaq" Pete was born Oct. 11, 1954 to Clyde and Daisy Acoman at Bethel. She attended grade school in St. Michael, and later graduated from Mt. Edgecumbe High. After graduating, she applied to Sheldon Jackson College, was accepted, but her intention to attend was short-lived due to her mother's death.

She became her siblings' caregiver without too much hesitation, as she felt that she was going to be much needed at home more than ever.

Although her wishes to continue her education fell short, there was no abandoning what she would later be thankful for, and that was to watch her sisters grow.

In February 1977, she and Jerome joined hands in marriage at Stebbins, and together adopted and raised two boys, Branson and Jeremy. Much later in their marriage, they decided to adopt another, and Ethan joined the family. Mary's sole offspring, Daisy Lockwood-Katcheak was her only natural daughter.

Mary was an avid reader, loved puzzles, crosswords, and at times, entertained herself at solitaire. She easily made friends wherever her jaunts took her, and would often keep in touch by phone, and or letter

Her friends spanned from Southeast to the Northwest and with a great many from Savoonga, Gambell and Diomede. She often thought of those who made a difference in her life, and would discuss what it was that held her attraction to them. Though she would rather be "in person" next to them, she felt that by being in touch would count just the same.

She felt that friends needed to be part of her life, and kept them with her by mentioning those who touched her the most. Her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchild were very dear to her heart, and she would lovingly speak of them as though they were sitting next to her. Her family came first when it came to everyday living, and in spite of her illness, she continued to make sure that the food was prepared, clothes washed, house cleaned, and gave lectures on what she would want the best for them.

In December 2009, she was diagnosed with colorectal cancer, which later metastasized into liver cancer. In May of 2011, we learned that her illness had spread into her other vital organs, and together we surmised that the inevitable was on its way with no doubt that this was it.

She never uttered a word of remorse, but accepted what life had dealt for her. Words cannot exemplify how grateful we are to: Aunt Judy and Matt McMoore, Aunt Susie Horn, Steven and Cee-Cee Pugh, Beth Conrad, Al and Maggie Wasuli, Merle and Diane Acoman, Phillip Nunooruk, Bibianna Prince, Stephanie and Bibianna Aluska, Dr. Smiley, Ouyanna House staff, Shuttle drivers, ERA Alaska, the oncology crew and those of the chemotherapy department all in Anchorage, ERA Alaska staff of Unalakleet. Thank you all so very much! Last but not least, thanks to all those who helped support the family during our loss of our mother, grandmother, great-grandmother, sister, and aunt Mary H. Pete to many nieces and nephews from Stebbins and St. Michael. Thanks to David Mike, who built the beautiful cross, and to Ronald Kirk for the coffin and those who labored for her gravesite. Mary succumbed to her illness on July 14, and was laid to rest on July 18, 2011. We all love and miss you Mary.

The Martin family would like to thank you all for you Lhank you loving and caring support, those who brought food, and to the Nome residents, those who called and texted, and those who weren't mentioned, you're not forgotten.

Thanks to Stebbins IRA, Bering Straits Corporation, Bill Moore Slough, Kawerak, Nome Trading Co., Albert Teayoumeak, Albert Bogeyaktuk, Cyril Pete, who assisted and brought our son and brother home to rest. May the good Lord be with us all in our time of loss.

> Lawrence Paul Martin II, may you rest in peace, we love you, and we miss you very much.

TRAVEL TO EXOTIC DESTINATIONS— Nine members of the xclusive furkish fravelers. Club recently were the first of their country to travel from Alaska to Russia via the Bering Strait, albeit not by boat or other adventurous vessels, but via Bering Air. Professor Dr. Orhan Kural, a mining professor at the Istanbul Technical University, and president of the illustrious Turkish Traveler's Club boasted to have already visited 226 countries, writing books, having his own radio program and two TV travel shows in Turkey. The group came via Anchorage and Fairbanks to Nome and was traveling from Nome to Provendeniya for one night. Orhan said in an interview with The Nome Nugget that he guides those groups to exclusive destinations in the world, off the beaten path and yet unspoiled by mass tourism. He said their aim is to see with their own eyes authentic lifestyles of the countries they are visiting and building bridges between theirs and other countries.

They and their support crew went from Teller to Wales, but then were turned back by bad weather and stormy seas in their try to cross the Bering Strait. Last year they also had to abort their mission to kite board across the Strait.

The gold rush is on – again

By Diana Haecker

An offshore minerals lease sale the Alaska Department of Natural Resources scheduled for September in Nome and the prospect that the Discovery Channel reality show "The Gold Rushers of the Bering Sea" may bring an onslaught of miners with dreams of striking it rich, are reasons for city officials to worry about the ramifications.

City manager Josie Bahnke said that the city is dealing already with impacts due to a noticeable jump in numbers of offshore dredge miners this year, but a lease sale and the TV show may intensify the situation. "The overall impact of the miners and the offshore lease is that there is going to be an increase in demand for city resources without the revenue to support it," Bahnke said.

The death of an offshore miner has raised the concerns to a serious level for Bahnke. In the aftermath of the tragedy, the city met with DNR and the federal mining and vocational safety regulating bodies MSHA and OSHA only to find out that the state's and federal definitions of recreational mining diverge and jurisdictions are unclear.

The port is a choke point, where the city feels the impact of an increasing mining fleet. Although the vessels pay for a season permit, an increase in the gold dredging fleet worries port and city officials.

The problem is overcrowding and harbormaster Joy Baker testifies to the fact that this summer oceangoing dredges outnumbered fishing boats 34 to 22. Baker said she does the best to accommodate them and to keep them safe in the small boat harbor when storms rage outside, but is uncertain how many more could be safely placed in the harbor.

Besides working on safely harboring offshore dredges, the city's vol-

Port of Nome ripe for expansion

By Diana Haecker

Once the ice releases the port of Nome from it's grip, the city-operated harbor becomes one of the busiest places in Nome. However, unless one is a fisherman, or gold dredger or the recipient of cargo to be offloaded from one of the many barges, the busy-ness of the port of Nome goes unnoticed by the regular Nome resident. With increased shipping traffic looming due to the melting Arctic sea ice, the busy days at the Port of Nome may soon increase and in-

A mantra repeated by Nome's harbormaster Joy Baker – whether be it in front of the Northern Waters Task Force or port commission meetings at City Hall – is this: It's only getting busier, let's prepare for the onslaught of more treffic

The Setun

Currently the harbor is divided in an outer harbor, where two docks can accommodate ships and barges, and the inside harbor for smaller vessels and barges. A few years back, the Army Corps of Engineers added on a 270-ft. spur to the 2,712-ft. causeway and built a 3,000-foot breakwater to the east to protect the vessels from the swells. At the causeway are two docking spaces. The outer cell is referred to as the City Dock. It is 200 feet long and has a draft of 22.5 ft. The WestGold Dock, where the 11-story high gold dredge BIMA used to tie up, is the inner cell and has a 190-ft. face length with also 22.5 ft. draft. In the early morning hours on Sunday, William Chase Booth, 19, died in a motor vehicle collision on the Old Glacier Creek Road. According to Alaska State Trooper spokeswoman Beth Ipsen, Booth was riding his dirt bike with a friend on another dirt bike towards town on their way back from a party, when Booth collided with an oncoming Chevrolet pickup truck driven by Bryce Warnke-Green, 22.

Troopers say Booth was wearing a helmet, but was reportedly riding his bike on the wrong side of the curvy road. The dirt bikes were not equipped with headlights. Booth was taken to the Norton Sound Regional Hospital where he was pronounced dead

Ipsen said the investigation is ongoing. The investigating troopers suspect that Booth was driving under the influence of alcohol and marijuana. Ipsen said that toxicology tests of both drivers involved in the accident were done, a standard procedure for motor vehicle collisions with fatalities.

Chase Booth is the son of Evan and Crystal Booth of Nome.

A memorial for Chase Booth will be held Saturday, August 13 at the Nome Armory at 4 p.m. There will be refreshments (no potluck). Please join friends and family to honor the life of Chase Booth.

Two die in Elim rollover

By Diana Haecker

Early Sunday morning a single vehicle crash caused the death of two teenagers in Elim. Heather Saccheus and Oscar Takak Jr., both 19 years old, died on the scene of the accident, about two miles north of Elim on Moses Point Road.

According to Alaska State Troopers spokesperson Beth Ipsen, Heather Saccheus was the driver of a stick-shift Ford Ranger and had four other passengers on board including the truck's owner, Arnold Saccheus, 23, Heather's cousin.

They were driving on Moses Point Road near Bald Head, heading down a slight decline and a left curve. Ipsen said the vehicle was traveling at a high speed between 60 and 70 mph when it got out of control, left the roadway and rolled four times before it came to a stop.

All but April Daniels, 16, were thrown out of the vehicle. The driver and Oscar Takak Jr., who was sitting in the rear left passenger seat, died on scene. John Jemewouk Jr., 19, ran to get help.

Jemewouk and April Daniels were treated at the Elim clinic for minor injuries. Arnold Saccheus and Desiree Murray, 19, were flown to Anchorage for treatment of serious but non-life-threatening injuries,

Letters -

Dear Editor.

It seems law enforcement has no interest in the problem of double parking on Front Street in front of the Post Office. As a citizen of this community, I would like to point out the danger in such a practice. When driving a street-legal vehicle on Front Street, it is very hard to see pedestrians through double-parked vehicles

Today I had a very close call when a bicycle came out into the street from in front of two vehicles parked side by side in the street. As much as we like to think that rules do not apply to us in Nome, U-turns and double parking in front of our local courthouse/post office is not a safe practice.

Walking a block will not kill most of us. Running over someone because of illegal parking practices could. If you can't parallel park, use the lot by the BSNC building and take your chances crossing the street. The traffic enforcement in this town is the absolute worst of any place I have lived in my life.

Anthony C. Parsons Nome, AK

Dear Editor,

My main concern of this letter is the closure of the commercial salmon fishing in the Golovin Bay area. I am not a commercial fisherman but have concern for the Golovin Bay fishermen. I know the closure all depends on the salmon run or salmon escapement past the Niukluk River counting tower or something along that nature.

I know for a fact that the escapement numbers of salmon past the

Rep. Neal Foster's Report

Hello, it was so good to see all of you at the community meeting. I was happy to get your input and hope that those of you who couldn't make the meeting would like to follow up to contact either my Nome or Juneau office. I'd like to focus this newsletter of the subjects that came up at the meet-

Bering Strait oil and gas development

During the three public meetings, this topic probably had more questions and input than any other. Between 1980 and 1985 ARCO and Exxon drilled eight wells in the Norton Sound basin approximately 30 miles offshore. Five of these wells showed moderate to strong "shows of gas" at varying depths. At the time the companies were looking for oil so the gas findings were not further investigated. Energy reports by the Department of Energy listed these quantities as most appropriate for local consumption, but further exploration could turn up commercially viable quantities. These test wells were in Fed-

Editorial

What's ahead of us?

Times are changing. That's good, but we have to stay a jump ahead so we don't get overwhelmed and crushed. We have current problems that will only get worse if we continue to do nothing. Are our City Planners up to the challenge? Do we have townspeople who are willing to make waves?

Are we doing anything to alleviate the chronic and worsening parking problem in town? Has the City thought about making the lot across from City Hall into a parking lot? Perhaps they could buy out the dilapidated structures east of the Visitor Center for parking? What are we doing about our bad intersections where everyone parks right up to the very edge of the corner? Why not invest in some yellow paint for the curb? How about a painted crosswalk or two? Then there's the problem of what to do now that the Discovery Channel has paved the way for every gold-seeking flimflam opportunist to flop their dredges on our beaches next year. What do we do with folks who fill their plastic buckets with sand on Middle Beach and haul them off to pan the gold elsewhere? What do we do about changing beach patterns? Now that we have reconfigured the port/causeway/jetty there is a different pattern to the deposition of sand. We have beaches where none existed before. There is sandy beach in front of town. Who owns that beach? Who can pan for gold on it? Who provides sanitation facilities for the influx of beach miners? Who cleans up the mess? Who issued the mining permits? Better yet, who pays

We have a lot of hard-working, knowledgeable and experienced people in Nome and its surroundings. We can't let time get ahead of us. We need to get plans into effect now. Some of our problems can be solved with a simple phone call; others need plans and ordinances to keep Nome from being the victim of ignorance and greed. We need planners who can go beyond allowing variances that permit structures to be built into the street. We can't wait. Time is not in our favor. We need to get the ball rolling and not get stuck behind the eight ball.

News from around the state

Salazar visits Alaska again

Secretary of the Interior Department Ken Salazar and his deputy David Hayes are in Alaska this week. US Senator Lisa Murkowski requested their visit to assess resource development and public land issues. They are scheduled to visit the BLM Alaska Fire Center in Fort Wainright, do a BLM tour of the North Slope and visit Denali National Park. Salazar and Haves plan to attend roundtable discussions with Alaska business and labor leaders with US Senator Mark Begich and Senator and chairman of the Senate Interior Appropriations Subcommittee Jack Reed, D-Rhode Island.

FAA shutdown ends

The partial shutdown of the Federal Aviation Administration ended when Congress reached an agreement on a temporary extension of the agency's operating authority through September 16, 2011. The FAA has been shut down since midnight on July 23 when the U.S. House of Representatives failed to pass a clean short-term extension of FAA programs. In Alaska 79 employees were laid off and the FAA issued stop work orders for airport improvement projects in Anchorage and Bethel.

Arne Fuglvog faces federal fishing violation charge, signs plea agreement

Arne Fuglvog resigned July 31 as fisheries aide to Sen. Lisa Murkowski, and on August 1 he was charged with a criminal fisheries violation in U.S. District Court in Anchorage. The charging document says Fuglvog submitted false statements on several occasions throughout 2005 about the location where he caught more than 30,000 pounds of sablefish valued at approximately $100,000. The sablefish were then sent out of Alaska to be sold in interstate commerce in violation of the Lacey Act.

Fuglvog signed a plea agreement on April 8 agreeing to plead guilty in exchange for a recommended sentence of 10 months in prison, a $50,000 fine and a $100,000 community service payment.

The plea agreement says Fuglvog had an individual fishing quota permit for sablefish in the "Western Yakatat" area that allowed him to catch about 30,000 pounds of sablefish in the area in 2005. "...Fuglvog actually caught approximately 63,000 pounds of sablefish in the Western Yakatat area in 2005," states the plea agreement. "Fuglvog covered up his illegal fishing by submitting false statements when he landed the fish indicating that over 30,000 pounds of sablefish were caught in the statistical area designated as "Central Gulf," when in fact the fish were caught in the Western Yakatat area....

Fuglvog received press attention in 2009 as a leading candidate to head the National Marine Fisheries Service, but withdrew his name from consideration. He is a former member of the North Pacific Fishery Management Council, which oversees management of fisheries in federal waters off Alaska.

On Aug. 2 Murkowski issued a statement noting that Fuglvog had violated the fishing regulation with which he is charged prior to joining her staff.

"Arne served Alaskans for the past five years on my staff and for over a decade before that in his public service work in fisheries," Murkowski said. "I thank him for his years of service, but he knows the importance and value of our fisheries, and he also knows what all fishermen understand: fishing laws and regulations must be followed.

"Arne has cooperated fully with the authorities, taken responsibility for his actions, and accepted the consequences," she added.

Shell gets BOEMRE permit

The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement on Thursday issued conditional approval for a revised exploration plan submitted by Shell Offshore Inc. The plan outlines Shell's proposal to drill up to four shallow water exploration wells in Alaska's Beaufort Sea beginning in July 2012. Among the conditions of approval is the requirement that Shell obtain all necessary permits from other agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service. BOEMRE determined that there is no Environmental Impact Statement required and issued a finding of no significant impact.

K300 has new race manager

The 2012 Kuskokwim 300 sled dog race seems to be a 'go' with the hiring of a new race manager. The race was in danger of being canceled due to a lack of a race manager. Last week, the K-300 committee hired former Bethel resident Zach Fansler to do the job. Fansler was a K-300 volunteer in the past and had served as the Tuluksak checker and dropped dog coordinator. Fansler will start the job in August. Race chairman Myron Angstman said that once news broke that the 2012 race may be not happening, the race committee had a tremendous response and picked the person with previous volunteer experience.

In-state gas line goes forward

Plans for a 24-inch natural gas pipeline built from the North Slope to Southcentral are moving forward. Dan Fauske, president of the Alaska Gasline Development Corp. briefed legislators and said that a 430-mile state right-of-way was granted for the $7.52 billion project on July 25. A draft environmental impact statement is due out in August.

Sen. French says lowered oil production tax unwarranted

During a tour of the Portland harbor, Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, saw two new $100 million drilling rigs headed for Alaska's North Slope. The rigs are part of BP's land-based drilling program and made news in Portland when they required a shutdown of interstate traffic during rush hour when they were transported down the Willamette River from the shipyard. French argued that the rigs are evidence that Governor Sean Parnell's proposal for lowered oil taxes is unwarranted.

NovaGold's Galore Creek Mine to cost $5.2 billion

A preliminary study on NovaGold Resources Inc.'s Galore Creek copper-gold-silver project in British Columbia has set the price of developing and building the mine at $5.2 billion. The project is owned by NovaGold and Teck Resources. The new prefeasibility study was released last week and put the cost of building the project 20 percent above prior estimates.

DID THE RIGHT THING- Kevin Green and Antonyo Spencer notified authorities when they found a gun under a building.

Kids find gun under Boys and Girls Club building

By Diana Haecker

Two boys made a curious find under the Boys and Girls Club building last Saturday and may have averted an accident waiting to happen by doing the right thing: they told an adult what they saw.

Antonyo Spencer, 10, and Kevin Green, 12, walked past the Boys and Girls' Club when they noticed something sticking out of the grass under the building. "We saw something like a barrel sticking out and checked it out, and it was a gun," Kevin Green said. Antonyo took a photo of the rusted barrel poking out of the grass, sitting under some torn down fencing.

The kids realized it was the rusty barrel of a shotgun. "Whoa, it's a gun, it's under the Boys and Girls Club, that's not right," said Antonyo Spencer and they both decided to leave it alone and to get help.

Kevin wanted to get the police, so they walked to the old cop shop, but found the doors locked there. They continued on to the hospital because Antonyo remembered that a security guard works there. So to the hospital they went, notified the security guard who then called the Nome po-

NPD Sergeant Byron Redburn responded and was very pleased with the course of action those two youngsters took. "They minimized the handling of the item and told an adult," Redburn said. "Very well done. You couldn't ask for more." Redburn said that the 12-gauge shotgun was rusted and although it was missing its butt, it could have been a fatal find since a round of ammunition still could have been stuck in the chamber. It appeared to have been sitting under the building for a while, but has now been safely re-lines are in place and the city also sees to it that ships can offload their garbage in Nome.

The transition to the inner harbor has a depth of minus 12 feet, and then inside the inner harbor, the turning basin and the barge ramp are at a depth of minus 10.5 feet. This is where the small vessels, the gold dredges, the fishing fleet and the transient vessels tie up and the barges offload fuel and cargo. In short, this is where it gets busy and crowded

This year, there is a local fleet of 20 fishing boats. Last year, the city gave out 19 seasonal permits to fishing boats. The lure of gold and the $1,600 per ounce price of gold drove the number of ocean-going gold dredges up from 22 last year to 34 this summer. Plus, there are cargo barges, fuel barges, a cruise ship, transient ships like research boats, small tugs and barges, small tenders from Golovin and recreational boats that are en route to or from the Northwest Passage.

The small vessels and gold dredges not counting, Nome's port had approximately 300 dockings last year. With back-to-back storms that Nome saw this summer, a lot of dredges and smaller vessels had been holed up in the safety of the harbor, stretching the port at times to be bursting at its seams. "We haven't determined yet what the number [of the port's capacity] is, but we're getting close," Harbormaster Joy Baker said. With no barges in the inner harbor, Baker said, she can accommodate everybody there. But things get tight when the barges are coming in to offload their cargo or fuel, and other boats are tied up on the east wall. "Then we have to double up the small craft and make room for the barges," she said. "Right now, we're managing it. But if either of the fleets, either the fishing or gold dredging fleet, continues to grow, it will become more and more difficult. At one point we will have to determine what the maximum number is for the local fleet," Baker said.

Except for a couple of days when everybody decided to arrive in Nome at the same time, Baker said the outer harbor has not been too busy. "But the small boat harbor has definitely been crowded since July," Baker said. "We spent most of our time managing the over-crowdedness in the small boat harbor, for unteer emergency services, the public works department for garbage pick up, police resources and even animal control services had to be called to West Beach. With the opening of West Beach as a recreational mining area, a tent city has gone up. The new landlords, Nome Gold Alaska Company, grant camping permits on West Beach to miners at $200 per season with a $200 deposit to assure cleanup is done after the campers leave.

While the camping arrangements are out of the city's jurisdiction, Bahnke said her concern is that when more dredges crowd the harbor, some miners may pull up their vessels on the beach, as happens already, and that they may become a floating environmental hazard in storm surges that frequently pummel the shores of Norton Sound.

The DNR has not quite finalized how many tracts are up for lease. In way of background, DNR's mineral manager Kerwin Krause said that the only offshore lease sales in the state of Alaska were in Nome and Goodnews Bay. "The Goodnews Bay lease sale never happened due to appeals and a State Supreme Court Ruling that required the State reevaluate the probable types of mining apparatus that would be used for mining and the potential environmental impacts from any mining. The DNR did not conduct this reevaluation, therefore the sale did not take place," Krause wrote in an email correspondence with The Nome Nugget.

Nome had two sales in past years. "In 1989 there were seven large lease tracts covering 23,850 acres between the Penny River and Cape Nome," Krause wrote. "In 1998, 12,292 acres were relinquished which were offered in our last lease sale in 1999. During 2009 and 2010, DNR terminated over 20 of the lease tracts for lack of continuous production. Early this year in 2011, five lease tracts remain covering 4,400 acres. The lease sale will be for the acreage terminated in 2009 and

He said the final decision on how many tracts are going to be for lease is soon to be made.

Asked how DNR plans to administer the program, Krause wrote, "Hopefully we will have a seasonal position in Nome to monitor the mining activity on the mining leases next vear as well as the two recreational mining areas."

He also has concerns regarding the Discovery reality show and wrote that if the price of gold remains high, out of town miners with gold fever may decide to give mining offshore of Nome a try. "This will be OK providing they have sufficient financial resources they don't mind losing. Obviously they will spend money with the local merchants. Hopefully they will know sooner than later if gold mining is not going to be profitable for them. The problem for the City of Nome will be if these people run out of money and they can't find a job or afford a ticket to get back where they came from."

Addressing the city's concerns regarding regulating and enforcing the safety of the gold dredges, Krause said he hopes that the Coast Guard would conduct yearly inspections of the dredges when they are in Nome. The Nome Volunteer Fire Department's Search and Rescue unit mans the small harbor vessel Guardian that responds to local nearshore and offshore calls. Asked about which agency DNR envisions to be in charge of SAR, Krause wrote, "Hopefully search and rescue operations will be jointly facilitated by the harbor master, AST and any offshore miners in close proximity to those who call for help." Joy Baker clarified that an actual SAR on the water would involve the port, the Nome Police Department, the Nome Volunteer Fire Department Search and Rescue unit, the US Coast Guard and the Alaska State Troopers and any local vessel in the immediate area of the call.

She adds that the distance from shore and the weather conditions would play a factor in whether the Guardian is used or whether it requires air support and larger vessels. However, she said this doesn't really impact the gold dredge miners as she doubts that any of them will ever go that far. The lease sale is to be held on September 28 at Old St. Joe's Hall in form of a sealed bid and an outcry auction.

MULTI-TASKING — Harbormaster Joy Baker answers the phone on one of her many rounds of the harbor and port facilities.

Nome port ripe for expansion

used to write and receive emails on the go, and a cell phone that constantly rings. The port is a three-person operation with Baker, her assistant harbormaster Lucas Stotts and office manager Tim Shield. Sometimes the city's public works is called in for road maintenance, some repairs and when oil is transferred at the causeway or when large vessels need help with their shiplines.

While the harbormaster's office is not manned 24/7, either Baker or her assistant Lucas Stotts answer the port's cell phone or radio around the clock. During one of her many daily rounds of the port, Baker takes out the Blackberry and frequently emails herself reminders to take care of this that and the other once back in the office. "If you don't take care of the little things right then and there, they pile up and you'll never get it done," she explains her constant multi-tasking actions.

Baker's day starts early at 6:30 a.m. when she begins the first of her approximately eight daily rounds of driving around the harbor to check on things. She drives from her home on Lomen Ave. – with a view of the harbor from her apartment — down to the east side of the port. There, she explains, she checks to see what the swells are doing and for surprise vessels that may have arrived unannounced overnight.

In order to manage the harbor and its limited sheetpile docking space smoothly, the port requires larger vessels and barges to call in and reserve a spot. "Surprise vessels that you find when you come in the morning really interfere with our scheduled operations here," said Baker. That means sometimes getting up in the middle of the night and telling boats to move out of a spot that another vessel had reserved. On dry dock is the dredge that just got finished dredging out the inner harbor for the annual removal of sand and silt.

The city also owns various pads around the harbor and the container yard, and Baker not only needs to manage what's going on in the water but also on land. She continues her drive-through to the south wall and checks on the dredges parked there. Nothing out of the ordinary here.

The round continues on to the causeway. Baker radios her assistant to pick up the battery from the waterpiping trailer to recharge it. On this stormy and cloudy Friday morning, solar doesn't seem to do the job. Two piles of gravel are waiting there to be barged to Alakenuk.

At the causeway, the sunken vessel Lulu is in plain sight. What's the plan? "We're waiting for cost estimates to remove it," Baker said. "Then we'll take the numbers to the city council." Baker gets out of the truck and takes a few photos of the channel cut in the causeway and the current ripping through it. A few yards off the water seems to be boiling, caused by the deposits of sand that make that area shallower.

On the way out, she closes the gate to the causeway and heads up to the city's port pad, the Northland and Alaska Logistics' container yards and the tank farms. Another pile of sand is sitting at the city's port pad, bound to go to Kotzebue. This, Baker explains, is the new staging area for gravel as the causeway gets too busy to also have gravel piles put there.

Up at the port pad, she cordially reminds a miner to please not park his equipment in the middle of where trucks need to be moving around and answers some questions about the city leasing out space to put one's "can" on – that's port lingo for sea container – and off she goes to continue her round.

Next is a stop at the barge pad, the west end of the harbor, where the barges offload their containers. She stops, picks up a piece of scrap lumber and puts it in the truck bed. Then she points to huge bags of "dirty dirt" – contaminated soil that was barged in from St. Lawrence Island, waiting to be shipped to Seattle and properly disposed off there.

Taking photos of containers stacked high, Baker explains that she's doing that to keep track of who's parking how many cans on city property for exact billing. Photos document how long what cans were stored when and where.

Baker is not only taking care of the day-to-day operations of the port but also deals with bureaucratic tasks. She rattles down the list: Reports, billing, collecting, spreadsheets to track what's going on, compliance issues to track and document, port security training, oil spill training for her and the crew, incident command training, project planning, design, projects — present and future— to consider, port commission meetings and documentation that goes with that.

What the future holds

The port has managed to pay for itself so far, the repairs, the maintenance, some studies and engineering designs. But when it comes to bigticket items like fender repairs or an upcoming high mast lighting project, other entities are tapped to help out.

Baker said she just wrote a grant application for the State of Alaska's harbor program to help pay for the estimated $2.9 million fender repairs. But the real 1,000 pound gorilla in the room is the question who will finance the infrastructure needed to deal with the inevitable growth when maritime shipping increases.

While the inside harbor was busy, the outside harbor hasn't been out of hand busy except for a few days. Baker attributes that to the fact that there were less outbound gravel barges scheduled. "There is also not a lot of research vessel traffic going on this year," she added. But this may change soon.

In the last week, Shell received a crucial Clean Air Act permit for its Beaufort Sea oil exploration project and a conditional permit from the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement. When oil and gas companies are allowed to drill and explore, Baker says, the port of Nome will see a significant amount of traffic from their support vessels. "They stop by on the way up to fuel up, pick up some folks and then come down again to pick up fuel and take it to the larger vessels up there," Baker said.

Last year and in 2009, there was a large amount of research and support vessels. "Typically we see them at the end of the season when things slow down, the harbor starts to freeze and then the support, seismic and research vessels come down from the Chukchi and the Beaufort [Seas] and definitely keep us rolling as if we were in the middle of September," Baker said. Since it is safe to assume that more maritime traffic is heading up the Bering Strait, and Nome is the closest harbor to the arctic, there will be more ship traffic calling on Nome's harbor. "I believe we can count on increased traffic," said

Baker. She said that this means that the city needs to continue with their ideas of port expansion. "We are looking at expanding the port to accommodate 35-ft. draft vessels, specifically to accommodate Coast Guard vessels," she explains. "As we speak, we're having a dock for the causeway designed by PND to be able to accommodate more than two vessels at once in the outer harbor," Baker continued. Although that is a good start, she said, more ideas are needed to get larger capacity.

New ventures hike NSEDC's assets and liabilities

Revenues surge as pollock catch soars, crab prices rise

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. and its wholly owned, for-profit subsidiary Siu Alaska Corp. greatly expanded their investments in Bering Sea fisheries in the past year or so, acquiring valuable new assets and large bank loans to pay for them.

NSEDC's controller Rick Walicki reported net assets of $153.3 million and total liabilities of $27.2 million through June 30 at a board of directors meeting last week in Nome. Net assets have grown by $17 million and total liabilities by $15.1 million since June 30, 2010, when they totaled $136.3 million and $12.1 million, respectively.

In the first six months of this year, net assets rose by $9.2 million and total liabilities increased by $6.4 million. In the first six months of 2010, net assets rose by just $1 million and total liabilities increased by $5.8 mil-

The companies' new ventures in Bering Sea pollock, crab and cod fisheries are timely. The total allowable catch (TAC) in the pollock fishery increased by 54 percent this year, and crab prices are higher than last year. Pollock prices are down 15 percent due to the increased supply, but prices are good for all other seafood, NSEDC Quota Manager Joel Cladouhos told the board.

Walicki said harvest royalties totaled $10.6 million on June 30, up from $5.9 million a year earlier. Crab income totaled nearly $2.8 million on June 30 compared to $2 million on June 30, 2010, he noted. He said the cod harvest produced a profit of $1 million from revenues of $4 million and expenses of $3 million through June 30, versus zero in the first six months of last year.

Total revenues of $21 million on June 30 are well ahead of last year's pace, and investment activities used about $11.7 million of the funds, Walicki reports. He said net cash from operating activities is $7 million. Cash assets totaled $9.2 million on June 30, down from $12.1 million on the same day last year.

Major new ventures

Siu Alaska Corp. partnered with Coastal Villages Pollock to acquire 2.9 percent of the annual Bering Sea pollock TAC, seven trawl vessels and one crab vessel from Wards Cove Packing Co. on Feb. 1. The pollock resource is owned by the vessels. Five of the trawlers harvest pollock. Siu and Coastal Villages Pollock formed BSAI Partners, LLC to buy the assets of Alaska Boat Co. in Unalaska from Wards Cove. Siu President John Eckels declined to reveal the price BSAI paid for the assets.

Eckels said NSEDC bought one million pounds of crab quota from Wards Cove. Walicki said the company financed the $9.9 million crab quota purchase with a long-term loan of $9 million. The purchase accounts for most of the increase in NSEDC's quota share unit investments, which totaled $27.7 on June 30, up from $17.3 million a year earlier. Last week Walicki said NSEDC's crab quota loan and a Siu loan for $5.9 million are the bulk of long-term loans among total liabilities of $27.2 million.

NSEDC receives an allocation of 2.2 percent of the annual Bering Sea pollock TAC through the Community Development Program. The company owns 37.5 percent of Glacier Fish Co., which harvests NSEDC's CDQ pollock allocation and pays royalties on the catch to NSEDC. GFC also harvests its holding of about 6.2 percent of the annual pollock TAC and pays distributions from the company's profits to

In the summer of 2010, Siu purchased GFC's 50 percent interest in the C/P Glacier Bay's fishing rights in the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands Pacific cod fishery under the federal License Limitation Program (LLP). Siu already owned the other 50 percent of the vessel's LLP. At that time Siu and GFC jointly owned the Gla-

Siu drew on its line of credit with Wells Fargo Bank for about $8 million, invested more than $2 million in the Glacier Bay for debt payment, and at the same time purchased $6.1 million worth of cod LLP, Walicki reported in August 2010. Walicki said a Siu loan in the amount of $8.45 million was included in NSEDC's total liabilities of $12.1 million on June 30, 2010.

Walicki said Siu bought GFC's remaining interest in Glacier Bay Fisheries on Dec. 22. Eckels said the Glacier Bay is the only asset of Glacier Bay Fisheries, which is wholly owned by Siu. The purchase increased the value of NSEDC's property, plants and equipment to $16.4 million on Dec. 31, 2010, up $4.4 million from $12 million on June 30, 2010, Walicki reported.

The NSEDC board reauthorized a guaranteed line of credit for Siu for $6.7 million in July 2010 by a 14-1 vote. In November 2010 the board discussed a SIU business proposal in a session closed to the public and then voted 14-1 to authorize increasing Siu's line of credit for up to $16 million and authorized Siu to purchase crab quota in an amount not to exceed $11 million. Joe Garnie of Teller voted against both reautho-

Siu activities update

On Aug. 3 Eckels told the NSEDC board the C/P Glacier Bay had to go to a shipyard in July following inspection by the U.S. Coast Guard, and he expects it back on the fishing grounds by mid-August. Cod prices are strong, he added. He said BSAI operations are going well in the pollock fishery, with the Alaska Boat Co. doing a great management job.

GFC expects to complete this year's pollock harvest by mid-September, Eckels reported. He said GFC's Northern Glacier is doing well in its new operation. Joel Cladouhos said this is the first year the vessel has harvested NSEDC's CDO flatfish Eckels said the Aleutian No. 1 is ready for the golden king crab season that starts this month. The price of crab is normal, although it was a little depressed recently, so this should be another good year for the vessel, he added.

The Pacific Star is in the Aleutians doing a survey for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration until mid-September, Eckels reported. In response to a question from board chairman Dan Harrelson, Eckels said NOAA is paying $150,000 to charter the vessel for the season. The vessel's expenses totaled $250,000 last year, Harrelson noted. Eckels said attempts to sell the vessel at a price Siu can live with have not drawn much interest.

Eckels said operations at the Bering Star Fisheries processing plant in Dutch Harbor have been slow this summer, but he expects them to pick up when the crab season begins. He said the electrical system and fire alarms have been headaches. "We're getting through it, but it's expensive," he added. He said dock repairs are scheduled this fall and it will take a lot of work to make it safe for workers and harvest

In the summer of 2010, Siu and Western Alaska Ventures LLC formed Dutch Harbor Acquisitions LLC to acquire the assets of Harbor Crown Seafoods, a small, idle fish plant built in 2005. The plant is operated by Copper River Seafoods, which owns 60 percent of Western Alaska Ventures.

Eckels said an audit of Siu has been completed and is on file at NSEDC's headquarters in Anchorage. He asked the board to reauthorize an $8 million line of credit for Siu. Garnie asked why Siu needs that amount again. Eckels said Siu has no plans right now, but sometimes needs to act on something quickly. Garnie expressed reluctance to approve a line of credit without a business plan.

He said it seems every dime Siu makes gets eaten up by repairs and the plant is not functioning.

"Bering Fisheries is a small piece of our investment portfolio, but all the others are doing very well," replied Eckels. He said Glacier Bay Fisheries is very good, and BSAI has been financially sound since it was purchased. "Your comments are correct about Bering Fisheries, but it is a startup business in a worn down plant, but we don't expect to need much of any of this line of credit,"

Fishermen earn $2 million for red king crab harvest

By Laurie McNicholas

This summer's commercial red king crab fishery set a couple records: Fishermen received the most money ever for their catch, and Nome's Norton Sound Seafood Products plant received double the quantity of crab ever delivered there in one day—50,000 pounds. Some asked whether the plant should close to let processors catch up, but they said they could handle the mountain of crab that poured into the facility.

"They were tired, but they put their heads down and did the job," said NSSP manager Rich Ferry. "We have a great crew." Ferry said the fishery has more boats on line and more experienced fishermen. "The number of boats affect the rate of delivery," he noted. "The more boats, the shorter the season."

The board of directors of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., which owns NSSP, heaped praise on Ferry and his crew at the board's quarterly meeting last week in Nome. So did Jim Menard, the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, and assistant area manager Scott Kent.

"Preliminary harvest figures are 400,840 pounds harvested by 25 permit holders with a value of $2,015,705," Menard reported on Aug. 5. "The breakdown was 26,850 pounds harvested in the Community Development Quota fishery and 373,990 pounds harvested in the open access fishery. Prices paid for red king crab ranged from $5.04 to [$5.29] per pound. The record harvest of Norton Sound red king crab was in 1979 when nearly 3 million pounds were caught, but the price paid then was only 75 cents per pound only 75 cents per pound.

"The 2011 summer commercial crab season lasted 33 days and was the shortest season since the fishery went super-exclusive in 1994, effectively making it a local small boat fishery," Menard said.

The 2011 commercial harvest was 10.1 percent of the estimated legal biomass of 3.97 million pounds of red king crab and shot past the 9 percent guideline harvest level of 358,000 pounds in the last few days of the fishery. The fishery closed on July 30.

Chum harvest bountiful

The chum salmon harvest has topped 100,000 fish in both the Norton Sound and Kotzebue districts, reports Menard. He said this year's Norton Sound chum catch will fall short of last year's harvest of 117,743 chums, but the commercial catches of this year and 2010 are the best since 1988.

Menard said the cumulative harvest in the Kotzebue district totaled 135,000 chums for 78 permit holders last week. "The Kotzebue District commercial catch forecast is 230,000 to 260,000 chum salmon, but with additional runway closures [this] week, this season's catch will likely fall short of the forecast," he added.

Commercial fishermen in Norton Sound are now focusing on silver salmon. "Silver salmon runs continue to have a mediocre showing so far in Norton Sound when compared to the record runs in the last half of the previous decade," Menard noted.

Wolffish have long bodies, strong jaws and sharp teeth. They also have strong molar teeth for crushing and eating the crabs, clams, snails, and other hard-food items they find on the seafloor. The Bering wolffish is an uncommon solitary fish that prefers living on boulder strewn, pebbly, or sandy seafloors on both sides of the Bering Sea and, though uncommon, are even found in the Arctic. In 1995, a 31-lb wolffish was caught off Barrow.

Harrelson said Garnie's concerns are valid. He said GFC always has a line of credit available, portions of which can be used to pay for fuel and mechanical breakdowns. "It's there in case you need it," he added. He asked Eckels if it is normal for a business to carry a line of credit.

"Absolutely," replied Eckels.

"The unexpected expenses," said Harrelson.

Eckels said the Glacier Bay's recent unexpected visit to a shipyard cost $750,000 with only a week to plan. Harrelson said a line of credit is kind of like a credit card that you pay interest on.

The board reauthorized the $8 million line of credit for Siu by a vote of 13-1 with Garnie voting no. Orville Ahkinga of Diomede was absent from the meeting.

NSEDC's annual report

Janis Ivanoff, NSEDC's president and chief executive officer, said the company's annual report for 2010 will be sent to every mailbox in 15 member communities by Sept. 30. The 2009 annual report was sent to mail boxes by July 31, 2009 under a rule established by the Western Alaska Community Development Association, composed of an NSEDC representative and a representative from each of five other CDQ groups in western Alaska. WACDA changed the rule and the due date for annual reports on Dec. 14, 2010.

Horn visits Nome on way through Northwest Passage

By Sandra L. Medearis

World adventurer Mike Horn picked up supplies in Gjoa Haven Sunday and was sailing north along the west side of the Boothia Peninsula. Horn is heading to Resolute in the Canadian Arctic, if ice doesn't block his way through the Northwest Passage. Resolute is a small Inuit village on Cornwallis Island in Nunavut, Canada.

Horn is navigating the 108-foot sailboat Pangaea, to meet a group of young adults in Resolute to provide them the kind of adventure he dreamed as a boy in South Africa.

On July 18, Horn threw his lines onto the cleats at the Crowley Dock in Nome's Small Boat Harbor, for an overnight stay before leaving the next day for Barrow and ports of call eastward through the mythical passage from Alaska to Greenland across the top of the North American continent. The group he will meet are youth ages 15 to 20 years old, flown in by his Young Explorer's Program to embark on an adventure on Baffin Island to experience the natural world, identify challenges to the environment and propose solutions.

The kids will be working with a team environmental professor who will guide them in activities including taking permafrost measurements and conducting tests relative to the receding sea ice, according to Luke Johnson, a youth coordinator and EMT on the expedition. Johnson said study sessions would be broken up by adventure on a very big climbing wall on a steep cliff face.

Standing aboard the Pangaea at dockside, Horn said he has come to realize the future of the planet is in the hands of youth. His program aims to teach young people what his experience in many varieties of environments has taught him, to acquaint youth with the wonders of the environment while they are young, so that well-informed, they can save and sustain the world for generations to come.

Acknowledging human impact on environment is the idea behind the fouryear Pangaea Expedition, as a means to advance the mission statement "to enhance a respect of the environment," Horn said.

Horn's cruise through the Northwest Passage and sojourn on Baffin Island is a small piece of his Pangaea Expedition 2008-2012. YEP expeditions have already involved ports of call in Antarctica, New Zealand ice fiords, Malaysia, India Andaman Islands, India, Himalayans, Mongolia, Gobi Desert, Russia, Kamchatka and North Pole. After the current Canada adventure, the list of diverse future segments holds Colorado River, Amazon River and Brazil, and ending a year from now in east Africa. Many groups of young guests will experience the adventure-based learning along the way.

Respect for the environment begins with the boat, on which the Brazilian teak deck is spotless. When the Pangaea stopped in Nome, visitors shed their shoes dockside.

Specially built in Brazil, where aluminum for her recyclable hull is plentiful, Horn had the exploration vessel built for research, environmental and educational projects at sea and at ports of call along a four-year route. The boat's main motor is 600 square meters of sail to catch the wind, backed up by low-emission, twin diesel engines by Mercedes-Benz with state-of-the-art in electronic management for fuel injection and emission control, for optional use to get through ice of polar regions. The Pangaea has LED lighting and collects energy from many solar panels and a wind generator. Waste is compressed on board and offloaded at ports of call. The Pangaea shares its name with the hypothetical supercontinent that held all the landmass of the planet during the Triassic Period, during the Age of Reptiles 200-250 million years ago, after which it broke up into today's conti-

Horn, 45, knows adventure. He has tested his own mettle against lots of the adventures beyond his youthful fantasies. His wont is to travel solo without motorized transport. Rather, his vehicles of choice are the pirogue (swamp boat), bodyboard, shoe leather and sail. He has been awarded by the prestigious Laureus World Sports Academy of which he became a member in 2007.

Hom has lived through many recordsetting adventures in remote and challenging parts of the planet. In 2002, Horn set out to cross the North Pole alone and unassisted, but was turned back 45 days into his journey by frostbitten hands. After his hands healed, Horn went back out into the cold for Arktos, an expedition to follow the 12,427-mile route of the Arctic Circle without motorized transport or dogs. Horn shared some of that story with a dockside crowd in Nome.

"I experienced all kinds of weather in the two years and three months it took me to travel the Arctic Circle," Horn laughed, telling about temperatures in the -60° F range.

Horn stopped in Nome almost a decade ago on the Arktos expedition, where he became friends with locals Jeff and Peggy Darling. When Horn took off for Barrow on July 18, Jeff Darling rode along. Peggy did not go?

"Someone has to mind the auto parts store," she laughed.

Painted on the Pangaea's hull is the name of the major sponsor of the Pangaea Expedition: Mercedes Benz. Having solid sponsors—about 20, including the Mayo Clinic and Mumm champagne—allows Horn to remove money as a block for carefully selected youths to have educational sailing adventures. A long list of his own adventure experiences allows Horn to secure funding to back the kids.

"One kid could cost me up to $30,000 to finance. It's not me that pays, but I had to do 25 years of exploration to be able to find a sponsor willing to believe that I believe this kid's a good kid," Horn said. "No one goes around throwing $25,000 at them if they are not able to share and do something in return, so that's why the follow-up program [to continue the student's contribution] is so important."

The YEP has been very successful in Europe, with young participants spreading the word themselves. Horn does not pass out fliers at high schools to fill out in study hall, for that might garner a lot of idle applications.

Photo by Sandra L. Medearis LANDLUBBER—Jeff Darling gives Amber Ryan a beginning sailing lesson dockside on the Pangaea, a 30-berth exploration vessel used in adventurer Mike Horn's youth adventure voyages. Darling received and accepted an invitation to sail with Horn and crew to Barrow June 19 before the Pangaea headed for the Northwest Passage.

Hom seeks actively inquisitive, committed youths. Adventure is the bait. He would like to see some Alaskans apply.

"People have to find out about it. We don't paint the city red and say this is what we do because we get the wrong people," Horn explained. "We use media in a very subtle way, using adventure as a hook, 'Come out for the adventure of your life,' Then you get the right kind of child, inquisitive.

"He has to read about it in the newspaper or his mother and father have to read about it. If you find out about it that way, then you start looking into it," Horn said.

The application for the program is strenuous as is the training and actual adventure. "He has to send videos, write an application, so we can look at it. Then they've made the first step on their behalf. They go through a jury, then we decide who comes or not. It's not a complication, it's that we are looking for the right ambassador. We have to send them to a training camp; we have to determine this kid's character. It's not just physical strength," Horn continued.

The training camp in Switzerland selects from 100s of applications and ostensibly provides extensive physical exams, sports testing, agility tests and preparation for the tasks in the adventure, but also gives counselors an opportunity to study group dynamics, said Johnson. The expedition staff whittles the candidates to eight to 10 persons.

"It's whether he is physically and mentally strong enough. Then once you have a kid selected, he must be able to speak, he must be able to communicate, to share," Horn said. "He might be outgoing but he's not the right kid. [He? — Young women also participate in the expeditions.] You may need leaders, you may need followers, and so the selection camp is just a way of selecting a group of kids. They have to be interested in what they do," Horn said. "We try to keep them involved in the project by doing the follow-up programs—cleanups of coral, deserts, trees, so forth. We've done nine expeditions with no problems but like a scratch or a bruise, and the kids come back and share the message. That's how the project grows."

Explorer Mike Horn: Hungry for very big challenges

By Sandra L. Medearis

If Mike Horn, 45, stood in the middle of the sailboat Pangaea, he could look at 50 feet of boat fore and aft. The 108-foot motorized Pangaea is different, and certainly much larger than the vehicles that have taken him to remote adventures all over the world. Currently Horn is on his way through the Northwest Passage to meet a youth group and lead them in adventure-based activities that respect the earth and environment. He passed through Nome in mid-July.

He has preferred to travel using modes powered by him, without motorized assistance, using shoe leather, riverboards, skis and swamp boats. He descended Mont Blanc using a bodyboard and ended up on the French Riviera.

Born in Johannesburg, Horn grew up there and attended Stellenbosch University to study human movement science. In 1990, he left for Europe where he was a ski instructor and canyon guide. In 1991, a paragliding and rafting expedition beckoned him to the Andes in South America.

In 1995, Horn broke the world record for going down the highest waterfall, 22 meters, or 72.2 feet, using a hydrospeed on the Pacuare River in Costa Rica. Hydrospeeding is running rivers and rapids lying stomach down on a molded flotation device known as a riverboard in the United States. From there, Horn set out to accomplish more astounding explorations and extreme adventures. These included circling the earth along the equator.

In 1997, Horn undertook his first bigger than big, six-month expedition. He used shoes to get him from the Pacific Ocean to reach the headwaters of the Amazon River high in the Peruvian Andes. Then he picked up a hydrospeed, or riverboard, and laced through water creatures to travel the 4,350-mile length of the Amazon to the Atlantic Ocean. He slept where the jungle joins the banks of the river.

Doesn't Horn become frightened along the way? As when he was hurtling headfirst down the waterfall in Costa Rica? Scared? That makes it better, Horn said.

"I get frightened quite often, because if you don't get afraid, you should stop doing what you do, because you have no respect," he said, during a stop in Nome heading for the Northwest Passage. "The moment you become arrogant, and think you can push your way through everything, you're going to make the biggest mistake.

"I've been lucky in my life, but luck has two parts; it is the decision you made-right or wrong-that makes you lucky or unlucky. This leads to the experience and the knowledge you've acquired through 25 years of exploration," Horn said. "Either you die soon or you never die and you become very old. I've been very fortunate to go through the first 10 or 15 years where I was very lucky, and that's very normal, because if you're out there where you're freezing or you're drowning, you've got a risk which is human, then yes, you are afraid. I love being afraid. That can become your motivation where you overcome that little obstacle."

Following the Amazon expedition, the 1999 Latitude Zero expedition took Horn walking and sailing around the world under his own power, taking a small sailing trimaran from West Africa across the Atlantic, then going by foot and then by pirogue-a small flat-bottomed boat used in West Africa and Louisiana marshes as fishing boats-through the Amazon jungle to the west coast of South America. When he got there, he picked up his trimaran from his team to cross the Pacific and Indian oceans. Reaching the other side, he hopped on a bicycle to set out across Africa and finished up by foot and using a small boat.

His many adventures include reaching the summits of two Himalayan peaks over 24,000 feet high in 2007 without supplemental oxygen.

Horn has been awarded by the prestigious Laureus World Sports Academy of which he became a member in 2007. The 47 members include Nadia Comaneci, Boris Becker, Tiger Woods, Marvin Hagler, Jack Nicklaus, Mika Hakkinen and Bill Shoemaker.

How did Horn decide to leave a pat family business position and decide to become an explorer and extreme adventurer?

"I don't think you become an explorer. You get born to be an explorer. You have to be passionate about leaving home. You have to be passionate about risking, not risking your life, but taking risks in your life," Horn went on. "There's no difference in the risks we take or the commitment we put into it. I wanted to use exploration because as a kid I loved being outside. I always challenged other kids as a kid. I was sitting in the classroom looking through the window thinking I'd rather be outside. You have to go through the process of being educated and all that. but when you have the freedom, even if you don't have the money and the support, you can become what you want to become. A lot of people are afraid to step out of their comfort zone, simply because you might risk losing what you have. If you are afraid of losing you can never win. "

So the day came when Horn threw all, including himself, to the four winds. Freedom seemed better than herding tomatoes.

"I was getting a masters in business economics. I was working for a family business importing and exporting fresh produce around the world out of South Africa. I was selling 100,000 tons of tomatoes to some place in the US or buying 10,000 pounds in Australia and selling it to New Zealand," Horn said. "It's like working in the stock exchange, except it's fresh produce. Everyday it comes and you have to sell it off the shelf because it's rotting. You have to move it.

"Very quickly I had what I needed; I thought that was what I wanted. The moment I had it, it tied me down. This isn't what I worked for—I wanted to be free. I had to get rid of what I thought was going to give me freedom in order to be free. I got rid of what I thought I wanted that I didn't need at the end of the day. I took a bag of clothes, left South Africa, and went to Switzerland. In a way, not a lot of people want that and most of us don't need that high adrenalin and emotions all the time because we're all different characters, but that's what I needed and that's what I did for me. Other people in life have to find their own path. I am just trying to live the life that suits my life that I wanted to live. I consider myself very privileged that way.

Horn keeps going. "We fill up our day with this "to-do' list, if someone calls and says let's go out and do something, you say 'I can't I have to do this,' so we don't have time. What's there on the to do list you'll never do anyhow. So instead of writing your time on the to-do list first, do what you want to do; that's going to give you more time to do what you are supposed to do. We just make believe that we don't have time. That's how our life is being consumed by all these to-dos that that society wants us to do. Everybody's in that groove and it's mainstream-going up stream. I don't want to go upstream; I 'd rather go with the current."

When he is not testing himself on his travels, Horn hangs his various hats in Switzerland, joining wife Cathy and two teenaged daughters, Annika (1993) and Jessica (1994), who have gone with him on family expeditions.

Asbestos Update

The Elementary school was built with NO ASBESTOS products and this remains to be the case. Nome Beltz was built using Asbestos Products and over the years a majority of it has been removed and or encapsulated. We had an independent contractor do our required 3 Year re-inspection and he found all remaining Asbestos to be well maintained and in no danger of release. We will continue to do our in-house inspection every 6 months but again anticipate no problems. There is a copy of the inspection report maintained at the District Office available for review by the public. Bill Potter, Nome Public Schools, LEA

Medical experts question the public health assault on salt

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

There is an ongoing medical controversy regarding the health effects of dietary salt.

New research published this month in the American Journal of Hypertension suggests that restricting dietary salt makes no difference in a person's overall heart health. After reviewing multiple studies on the effects of low-salt diets, the researchers concluded, "We found no strong evidence that salt reduction reduced all-cause mortality or cardiovascular morbidity in normotensives or hypertensives.'

Preventive-medicine experts immediately cried foul in a response published in the journal Lancet. "The totality of evidence, including epidemiological studies, animal studies, randomized trials, and now outcome studies all show the substantial benefits in reducing the average intake of salt "

In fact, only about half of the studies to date show a cardiovascular benefit to reducing salt in the diet. The other half demonstrates no effect or, worse, a harmful effect to restricting dietary salt.

The controversy is not new. The World Health Organization has named salt reduction as a priority in treating non-communicable diseases worldwide. However, surveys from around the world show that, despite wide variations in diet and culture. most people consume the same amount of salt daily. This has led some researchers to hypothesize that humans have a hard-wired set point in the brain for salt intake. This would theoretically make it very hard to reduce overall salt intake over time.

DOCTOR Furthermore, forced salt restriction may result in unintended consequences. Just as the "low-fat" diets of the 1980s caused people to eat more sugar, leading to obesity, people may consume larger portions of "low-salt" foods, and thereby more calories, in order to keep their sodium intake stable.

The key is balance. Dietary sodium is an essential part of the human diet. Added sodium, table salt, is rarely needed in a well-balanced healthy meal of vegetables, healthy meats, like fish, and healthy oils, like olive oil. We tend to add salt to otherwise unhealthy foods, like chips, fried foods, and red meats. In general, it is the food itself, not the salt content that is healthy or harm-

So, how can people balance their daily intake of sodium? Here are a few ideas:

First, read labels. Many foods like canned soups, fried foods, and processed meats are very high in hidden sodium. Select foods with a lower amount of sodium per serving, and rinse salt-preserved and canned Second, boost the amount of potassium in the diet to a healthy level. Foods rich in potassium are good for your heart and balance the effects of sodium. Potassium is best obtained from the diet. Foods rich in potassium include fruits, vegetables, whole grains, salmon, and beans. Potassium supplements can be dangerous and should only be taken under the direction of a physician. People with kidney disease should talk with a provider about the amount of daily potassium that is

Third, make sure that foods you prepare pass the test of tears. That is, does the food taste saltier than tears? Interestingly, the concentration of sodium in human tears remains constant and roughly equals the concentration of sodium in the blood stream. Therefore, foods that taste less salty than tears are likely better for your heart. Consider using the lowest amount of salt necessary when preserving your own foods.

Finally, remember the colors of salt. Not all salt is white. Try to proud to share their handiwork with everyone. She was a woman who truly loved the Lord and looked forlimit added salt in its other colors, like red salt in ketchup or salsa, or yellow salt as with mustard. Perhaps limit green salts like pickles or relish. And go easy on brown salts like soy sauce, gravy, and steak sauce.

As a general rule, adding salt in any color to food is a red flag that the food itself may be unhealthy and should be limited. Adjusting your diet to include more fruits, vegetables, herbs, and spices may be a challenge at first, but taste buds will easily accommodate a more balanced intake of salt, and your heart will appreciate your efforts to obtain sodium through a balance of these healthy

Credit Union One site stars in planning session

By Sandra L. Medearis

A representative from Boslaugh Construction, connected with overhauling a building to house Credit Union One, came before the Nome Planning Commission Aug. 2 to answer questions on a set-back variance for an access ramp that will be too close to Bering Street.

City law dictates a 10-foot setback on the street sides of a building. As it would be built, there would be less than 10 feet between the ramp and the street. The ramp is on the east side of the building next door to Airport Pizza, and accessible to cars driving up to the sidewalk curb alongside Bering Street.

The south side of the building on Warren Place, formerly housing an Arctic Cat dealership, was reserved for handicap parking and the west side for drive through access.

City planners told Benjamin Head, representing the project, that the construction could go ahead, variance granted.

But in other news, the planning commission learned that the alley between the Credit Union building and the east side of the restaurant would have two-way traffic going in opposite directions when the bank opens next month. Cars on Warren Place will be turning into the lane between the buildings from south to north to buy espresso drinks at the Airport Pizza window. At the same time, drivers wanting to do business at the credit union window will be turning from Fourth Avenue heading south, stopping at the window, and proceeding through the lane to turn onto Warren Place. At the same time, again, other cars may be turning onto Warren Place from Bering Street to visit Airport Pizza or Quality Auto Parts store. Yet, at the same time, cars may be coming out onto Warren

Place from the Bonanza Express filling station. The planning panel did not see a potential traffic free-for-all, as the lane measures the same as a city street. Head said there was no divider between the opposing traffic in the design.

In other business, the building and remodeling permit fees coming into City coffers for June came to $6,907 for valuation of projects totaling $521,067. The totals for the year to date are $34,939 in fees for projects valued at $5,160,974.

Coming up, the Nome Common

Council has put the extension of south-north-running Steadman Street further north to Bypass Road at the top of a priority list to facilitate meeting Nome's growth needs. The city manager has asked Alaska Gold Co. to look at selling the City an approximate 100 by 900-foot right-of-way easement located within the company's M.S. 1103 Commerce Bench Placer. Securing the property will allow the City to seek Denali Commission funds for the extension project

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Karen L. Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member, Nome Ministerial Association

"Now faith, hope and love abide, these three. But the greatest of these is love." 1st Corinthians 13: 13

These words come to us from Paul's first letter to the Christians in Corinth. Corinth in that day was a wild seaport town. The community of believers was often wracked with distractions, divisions and controversy.

I have officiated at many weddings where this scripture from Corinthians is quite popularly chosen. Ironically, though, Paul is not speaking here about the love between a man and a woman. He is specifically talking about community relationships and how Christians are called to strive toward "Agape"

The Greeks had at least three words to delineate the nuances of love; eros for romantic desire; phyla for brotherly love; agape for divine love. God's love is "agape" – unconditional, giving of itself completely for the life of others.

Paul's chapter on love is addressed to the faith community in Corinth. His words are meant to call them to attention: away from pettiness, away from arguing over who is greatest and which skills and gifts are most important. Instead do all things in love.

It is easy for Christians to get caught up in comparing who is the best speaker, the most spiritually enthusiastic, the most learned of scripture, the most intense in their prayers. But Paul reminds us these things are nothing without love.

Love comes from God who first loved us. God's love is most fully revealed in Christ. This love is contagious. It is what bridges the gap between ourselves and others. It is what bridges the chasm between the living and the dead

At the end of Norman Maclean's acclaimed novel "A River Runs Through It", the father reflects on the untimely death of his son who struggled with addictions. "Each one of us here today will at one time in our lives look upon a loved one who is in need and ask the same question: We are willing to help, Lord, but what, if anything, is needed? For it is true we can seldom help those closest to us. Either we don't know what part of ourselves to give or, more often than not, the part we have to give is not wanted. And so it is those we live with and should know who elude us. But we can still love them— we can love completely without complete understanding."

In this life we require faith and hope to believe in things unseen. Not often do we see a full vision of God's kingdom. Not often do we see the fruits of our labors. In the end, however, we will see God face to face. Thus, we will no longer need faith or hope. We will see clearly that which we believed and that for which we hoped.

But we will still need love. Love is eternal.

Niukluk River counting tower are based on estimates, which I personally know is not 100 percent reliable. Don't get me wrong, it is a good way to estimate the salmon run, but these numbers determine whether or not the Golovin Bay fishermen put money in their pockets, and the way the economy is right now, for the Golovin Bay fishermen, it is vital to get these numbers correct. These numbers are based on a 15 minutes counting window out of an hour.

Let me say before I get any further that I have nothing against the Sate of Alaska Department of Fish and Game employees that work the rivers, counting our fish.

Out of an hour, they count for 15 minutes, getting paid for 8 hours. Now I know there are logs they keep for the fish escapement, but that's another five minutes at the most to write something down and add it up. Out of the 8 hours paid for by the State of Alaska, if I am correct, there is only an actual 2 hours and 40 minutes worked out of the 8 hours, given 15 minutes of counting and 5 minutes of writing down the logs out of each hour. It seems to me that if you are getting paid for 8 hours, you should work for 8 hours and should count every fish that is going up the river. I know that would be the longest 8 hours of work. At least we could get real numbers of salmon escapement. I am getting off point talking about this, but it seems rational.

OK, back to the subject. So we have the escapement numbers figured out for the Niukluk River, but there are five more rivers to count: the Fish River, Klokerblock River, Katchavik River, Cheenik Creek, and McKinley Creek and each have spawning grounds for salmon. I know the surrounding villages are wondering where I got a couple of these names and spellings from; it's right off of the map. But in order to get actual numbers to base the closure of the Golovin Bay commercial fishing, these five rivers should have been counted.

I know it is a little late for FY 2012 to seek money for counting towers, aerial surveys, or counting weirs to be put up on these rivers, but not too late for FY 2013. I think it is crucial to have one of these methods of fish counting on these five rivers for the purpose of salmon escapement. I think I am not the only one who wants to see action on this subject. I feel that this past year the Golovin Bay commercial fishermen have been cheated by an early closure of commercial salmon fishing. This may be true for much of the Norton Sound Fishermen and the State of Alaska fishermen. By the way, good job to the Golovin Bay and Norton Sound fishermen and keep it up.

Sincerely, Henry Titus White Mountain, AK 99784

Hi everyone,

It just saddens me to hear of all the bad things I supposedly do – hard to believe; yet they do. All I have ever done is try my best at the things I can do. I was taught to do the best I can and help out people.

I have gone to college, within my own community, and have gotten decent grades. And as old as I am, I still take courses. I just came back from taking an Ethno botany class in Kotzebue and I had a blast and a half. I got to go to their get together at the Friend's Church there. I got to learn the names of greens, and the flowers one could use for sore muscles. They had sour dock up the ying-yang.

At times I am sorry that I must say my piece, but I try to make it toward the betterment of things. I only just try to find ways to benefit our people, because they count. I can never stress enough how much each person counts in our world.

At least, since I can't seem to find a decent job here, since I guess I'm not smart enough, I may as well go elsewhere. Although I love my community very much, I think I may feel a little too hurt at the moment to stay. At least I know I have other places I could pick and give away things.

But I still find it funny that for all these years there has been all these resources going out of Alaska, for them to say we were ever in the red on revenue. Much less to charge us these outrageous prices, being as we grossed $4.2 billion in revenue in 2010. So, how did it help us?

And they are trying to take Social Security and a few other things away? People earned that right to have that money by paying into it for years. Just because the government thinks they can give away our money to other nations doesn't mean that they can take away what is rightfully ours. I thought that the government is supposed to help our people. What's up with that?

I am just thankful that Unalak-leet does enforce the driving under 14 laws, along with the use of the helmet until they are 18, and the curfew law of kids under high school going in at midnight, and 2 a.m. for high schoolers. The tickets help pay for our policemen, among other things. My kids would get grounded and extra chores.

Yea, I am going to the Economic Summit meeting in Kotzebue next week. See what they could teach me, maybe tell them a little something, who knows, maybe even pick berries or go boating.

Anyway, you all take care and have a great rest of the summer. I know I intend to. And God really does help you out when you go to him in prayer. Prayer is a powerful thing. Stinkweed cures everything, and all you have to do is boil it and drink it, or you could wet it and place it on the part of the body that needs it. Some people chew a couple of the leaves, and some people put it on the rocks of the steam house, or use it as a switch. Easy to pick, easy to use, and it does a lot of good.

OK, I'll quit for now. Got to get up and do some paperwork in a few hours. Sometimes I get lucky and get to work for a few hours to help us get by.

God Bless you all. As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Compressed gas transportation

Federal regulations forbidding the transportation of compressed gases, like oxygen, had put rural Alaska in a tight spot, as often happens when decisions are made far from people they affect. Regulations coming out of Washington D.C. failed to recognize the unique logistical landscape of rural Alaska. Unlike the communities in the lower 48 we don't have trucking or rail as an alternative to air cargo. The Alaska Air Carriers Association has worked with our congressional delegation and received a waiver to this regulation. If you have any more questions please contact my office.

Transportation infrastructure fund

The House Finance Subcommittee will be having a hearing in Nome on Friday, August 19 from 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. at Old Saint Joseph Hall. They will be taking up House Bill 30, which would create a transportation infrastructure fund. Basically a large chunk of State savings would be placed in a dedicated account. The earnings of this fund would be used to fund transportation infrastructure projects.

To find out more contact our office or go to the web http://www.legis.state.ak.us/basis/get_bill.asp?session=27&bill=HB30. The committee will be taking public testimony and is eager to hear a rural perspective of this, so please attend and let them hear what you have to say.

These are a few of the many items brought up at the meeting. We also discussed issues associated with hydrofracking and its history in the Mat-Su Valley, the dwindling salmon runs in the northern Norton Sound and how a hatchery could help rebuild the stocks, net metering and its pros and cons for consumers and public utilities, suicide and other social issues. I would again like to thank everyone for their participation at the meetings and as always look forward to hearing from you.

Planning

The planners worked on the Nome Comprehensive Plan 2020 before and after the regular commission meeting, giving a total of over three hours to planning issues along with contract planner Eileen Bechtol. The commission has been involved in over eight years of planning activity beginning with a Phase I Comprehensive Plan adopted in February 2003. That plan included background, town meeting and survey reports to set goals, objectives and actions. Next came a land use plan in January 2005. Nome Common Council adopted a zoning code drawn up by NPC in October 2008. The Nome Coastal District Comp Plan 2020 strives to implement goals derived from a town meeting a year ago, followed by a survey conducted the last three months of 2010. The plan responds to Nome residents' commentary that puts quality of life issues at the top of the list, with heavy emphasis on controlling the effects of the alcohol industry. Planners agreed with the public input that economic development follows a close second as being bound to quality of life.

Nome's talent shows at 2011 Summerfest

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

Under sunny skies 10 of Nome's talented youth demonstrated their skills at the Summerfest held at Anvil City Square on July 31.

The grassy area in front of Old St. Joe's Hall filled up with Nomeites of all ages. The younger ones were drawn to a humongous bounce house that offered safe space for younger kids to go wild.

The local group "Monday in Cancun" with Kellen Baker, Brendan Wehde, Caleb Weaver and Miranda Murphy warmed up the crowd before the 10 talent contestants entertained them with rap performances, guitar and piano solos, trick bike stunts and hip-hop dancing. Judges Seiji Heck, Lance Cannon and Jeremy Master had a tough choice to make as all performers gave their best.

Eddie "Tater Tots" Tate as well as Matthew Medlin gave rap performances. Jason Glider soothed the audience with classical and saloon-style piano tunes. Christian and Isaac Vasquez, two brothers visiting family in Nome from Los Angeles, performed a choreographed hip-hop dance. Andrew Cooper and Corey Reynolds let their guitars weep and Tammy Trent played classical guitar and performed original songs. David Immingan emceed the event and kept the audience entertained in between performances.

Loren Sands aka "Half-Smoked", a rapper from Sitka, together with Nomeite Justin Bright, won the first place for his rap performance. Suicide prevention was the topic of his rap song, talking about the hurt suicide causes to the family and community. "Half-Smoked" won an iPad for first prize. Second place went to Dion Williams, who wowed the crowds with his stunning trick bike stunts. Spending most of his 10minute performance airborne, he launched himself off a ramp on his trick bike to throw backward loops, vertical spins and spread eagle jumps. Williams received an iPod Touch for his well-deserved second place. Third place and an iPod Touch went to Andrea Irrigoo, who jazzed up the crowd with a spirited hip-hop dance performance.

The judges rated the performances by confidence of the artist, appearance, quality of performance, difficulty, audience reaction and content.

The Summerfest is put on by the Youth Education Services, a newly formed non-profit 501c(3) organization. Bruce Klein is the president, with Janet Klein and Jeremy Master serving on the board of directors. The mission of the non-profit is to come up with art-oriented youth and after-school programs. "We're aiming more at the junior high and high school kids," said Bruce Klein. "We try to have something for them to do and to be involved in, like the Sum-

The Summerfest was also sponsored by the Nome Community Center and CHARR. The goal was to provide a smoke-free outside event for the community that focuses on healthy activities. Booths lining the perimeters included the National Park Service doing face painting, the CAMP department, Kawerak's Headstart program and Michele Ames' food stand. Al Burgo, who originally came up with the idea and the first summer fest held in 2008, set up the sound system.

"We've had a blast with this, it's been fun," said Bruce Klein. But he also adds that the event grew so big, especially with the 33-foot long and 14-ft high bounce house, that they need at least eight more volunteers to put on the event next year.

Sound Economic Development Corp. at a meeting two weeks ago in Nome.

In 2009 the board established a Community Energy Fund with $1 million for each of NSEDC's member communities for cost-cutting energy projects. The remainder of $1 million in funds allocated for White Mountain remains available to the community for future energy efficiency uses with board approval.

The NSEDC board also approved $300,000 in matching funds for a proposal from Mary's Igloo Traditional Council to the U.S Economic Development Administration for funds to construct a community economic development center in Teller. The traditional council requested a commitment for $350,000 in matching funds from NSEDC to meet a Sept. 15 deadline for submitting its proposal to the EDA.

Tender vs. RSW barges

Reece Huhta, manager of the Norton Sound Seafood Products salmon processing plant in Unalakleet, told the board he would like to see two more tenders on line to act as buying stations. He specifically recommended the acquisition of a larger vessel such as the 61-foot T/V Egavik or the 70-foot T/V Inaliq. He said tender vessels need to be on-site at commercial fishing openings.

NSEDC added the Egavik to NSSP's salmon tendering operations in 2008 and a year later purchased the Inaliq and equipped it with a refrigerated seawater system for ten-

The unusually heavy downpour of rain last week made Thursday, August 11 the wettest day in almost seven years with a precipitation of 1.21inches, reports the National Weather Service. This is in line with the trend of this wet summer of 2011, which already saw July being the seventh all-time wettest month in Nome's 105 years of weather data record keeping.

If Nomeites feel like this has been a very rainy summer, meteorologist Wes Adkins with the Nome station of the National Weather Service has the numbers to support the claim. Adkins said that July had a precipitation of 4.27 inches. "The normal is 2.15 inches, so we had almost twice the amount of rain of what is 'normal'.' Adkins said. He added that the wet season usually starts in mid-July and lasts through early October, but this summer saw the rains pouring down earlier than that.

Last Thursday's rainstorm broke the record for August 11 that was set in 1958. It also was the rainiest day since August 12, 2004. That year, 4.59 inches of rain fell in the month of August.

As of Monday - with a week of a dry pattern in the forecast - the total rainfall for August measures 2.95 inches. The 'normal' rainfall for August is 3.22 inches. Adkins said that in the past years, August months haven't reached the normal rainfall and that we're on track to reach that normal and probably surpass it.

Adkins said that climatologically, August usually is the wettest, with September being second and July being the third wettest months in the Nome year. "We usually get 60 percent of our precipitation in these three months," Adkins said.

UP, UP AND AWAY!—Bonanza Express in turn raised fuel prices following Crowley's jump start the week before. However, Bonanza customers at pumps in front of Nome Trading enjoyed a few days' delay in higher gas prices when the sign was changed, but pumps continued to register the old price of $4.99. When Bonanza discovered the unintended good deal, an employee locked the hoses with "Out of Order" signs Friday afternoon, sending rigs heading out to camps into a U-turn back to town to fuel un.

A Monday check of per-gallon diesel fuel prices showed Crowley at $5.84 per gallon for 0 to 199 gallons; $5.77 for 200-399 gallons; $5.71 for 400-999 gallons; $5.67 for 1,000 to 2,999 gallons and $5.63 for 3,000 gallons and over. Bonanza was keeping prices close to the vest, but staff said one could wait to ask Scott Henderson, fuel boss, who was in conference Monday afternoon. For the increasing number of people who buy oil 10 gallons at a time in jerry jugs, the Bonanza diesel price at the pump was $5.94 Monday.

Letters -

My wife and I just returned to our home in central Illinois after a two and a half week visit to Alaska. Three of those days were spent in Nome — our first visit to your small city - and we wanted to let everyone know how very, very much we enjoyed our stay. Of all the many persons we met in the state, none were friendlier than the folks in Nome, especially the family that came to our help when our rental car overheated on the Council Road or the cab driver who took us to the airport to check our plane back to Anchorage and actually thanked us for coming to visit, a first for both of us anywhere in the world.

We drove all three of the roads outside of Nome, in every case almost to their ends, and loved each and every mile. I guess some "outsiders" might not appreciate your endless tundra or the many views of the sea unless they were hunting or fishing; we did neither and still found both exciting. Nome may not be the prettiest city we've visited in our travels but it has a charm that few places can claim. We are glad we came and we are already planning another longer visit in the years ahead.

Enough

How much of our time and resources go to dealing with the chronic alcohol problem in Nome? Our cops could be solving real crimes if they weren't having to haul a sorry-arsed drunk to the hospital and then off to the jail. Picture the scene in the hospital emergency room where a mother with a seriously ill child has to share the room with a drunk who is puking, pissing, pooping on the floor and taking swings at the doctors and nurses. The medical attention should not be diverted from the sick patients who really need help.

Who pays for the time the drunks are in the hospital? Who pays for the time the police are hauling the drunks between the town, the hospital and the hoosegow? Who gets to clean the puke out of the police car? Who has to hose down the sidewalks on Front Street? How do families deal with the drunken relatives? How does our community deal with the social fallout from substance abuse? How do children fare in families with chronic alcohol abusers? How do businesses cope with time lost from work hours lost to hangovers? Who supplies alcohol to the obvious abusers?

We lose too much money as a result of alcohol problems. We have visitors who come to town with the sole purpose of getting loaded. We also have our own garden-variety standard Nome inebriate. We have problems that need to be solved. Perhaps we should collect a booze abuse fine of at least $200 in cash per incident directly from the individual. In addition we should impose a handling fee to the drunk's PFD check and send a service fee to the community from where they came. We also need to crack down on those who furnish liquor to drunks. Heavy fines should be administered. The money would fund a mandatory alcohol recovery program and a substance abuse education program and hot line. We spend entirely too much public money as a result of alcohol abuse. The price is too high. We need to deal with it.

Fuglvog pleads guilty

Last Thursday, former fisheries adviser for Senator Lisa Murkowski, Arne Fuglvog, 47, pleaded guilty to one charge of making false statements in individual fishing quota reports to the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration. Fuglvog gave false landing reports and covered up illegal fishing of sable fish and halibut in Western Yakatat. The value of the illegally caught fish was approximately $100,000. The plea agreement says that Fuglvog agreed to a sentence of 10 months in jail, a $50,000 fine and a $100,000 community service payment to the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation to enhance fisheries habitat in the coastal areas of the Gulf of Alaska.

Plane crash kills pilot, village teacher

On Saturday a Cessna 207 enroute from McGrath to Anvik crashed about 37 miles west of McGrath. The plane was piloted by Ernest Chase, 66, of Aniak, and had five passengers on board. The crash killed the pilot and passenger and village teacher Julia Walker, 52, of Anvik. Four survivors were evacuated from the crash site. taken to McGrath and transported via a C130 to Anchorage. They were taken to a hospital for treatment of non-life threatening injuries.

The survivors are husband and wife, Don Evans and Rosemarie Evans, both 32, from Anvik; and their children Donny, 10, and McKenzie Evans, 8. Troopers believe that weather and terrain played a role in the crash. However, NTSB responded to the crash scene to conduct the investigation into the cause of the crash. The pilot was apparently attempting to turn the plane back to McGrath when the plane impacted a mountainside. The plane was part of the Inland Aviation Services Inc. fleet of Aniak.

President Obama allows NCLB waiver

The Obama administration announced that it will soon allow states to apply for waivers from the No Child Left Behind Act. Secretary of Education Arne Duncan said that states will have the opportunity for regulatory relief from NCLB in the form of waivers to states agreeing to adopt reforms. Details on the waiver program are slated to be released in September. States will be given a couple of months to prepare applications, and waivers could be given out as soon as the 2011/2012 school year.

First Alaska performance scholarships to be awarded

The first graduates eligible for the 2011 Alaska Performance Scholarships have put in their applications to receive scholarships up to $4,755 a year for college or career and technical education. While eligibility information is still being submitted by school districts, early indications are that at least 2,337 of the Alaska high school class of 2011 met APS academic eligibility requirements. Approximately 75 percent of those who were qualified applied for the APS by completing the application by the June 30 deadline. APS awards this year are projected to total approximately $4 million.

Fish and Wildlife seeks comments for future of ANWR

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service opened a public comment period on a management plan of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. The plan wants to ensure long-term conservation of fish, wildlife and plants, and to sustain outdoor recreational opportunities and environmental education at ANWR

The draft plan, called a Comprehensive Conservation Plan and Environmental Impact Statement, outlines a 15-year management plan for the refuge. The draft plan contains six alternatives for long-term management, ranging from the continuation of current practices to the designation of three geographic areas for potential inclusion within the National Wilderness Preservation System, and the potential designation of four additional Wild and Scenic Rivers on the refuge.

Eighteen mushers sign up for Yukon Quest

Lance Mackey was among the 18 mushers to sign up for the 2012 Yukon Quest international sled dog race from Fairbanks to Whitehorse, Canada. Signed up are Mike Ellis, Brent Sass, Sonny Lindner, Allen Moore and Judy Currier, Kyla

Paige Drobny, Becca Moore, Tony Angelo, Misha Pedersen, Gus Guenther, Jake Berkowitz, Dave Dalton, Peg Harpham and Colleen Robertia. Head veterinarian is Dr. Kathleen McGill, the new executive director is Sue Thomas of British Columbia and Marti Steury is the executive director in Alaska. The purse is $150,000 for the 2012 race.

Federal Polar Bear scientist suspended

A government scientist was suspended from his job last month due to an internal investigation. Dr. Charles Monnett is a senior scientist at the federal Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement, and he was responsible for conducting and coordinating research on the distribution of marine mammals. Such research is conducted to produce baseline data against which to judge the potential impacts of proposed oil drilling.

The Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility group last week filed a complaint against BOEMRE on Dr. Charles Monnett's behalf for the actions taken against him. They suspect that the suspension was politically motivated, as Monnett has published a paper on the occurrence of polar bears being forced to swim vast distances due to the shrinking ice pack in the summer.

Microscopic eggs turn ocean near Kivalina orange

Vexed by mysterious orange goo washed ashore last week near Kivalina, scientists at the NOAA Alaska Fisheries Science Center's Auke Bay Laboratories have determined that the goo is microscopic eggs. Scientists believe the eggs are some sort of small crustacean egg or embryo, with a lipid oil droplet in the middle causing the orange color. Researcher Jeep Rice and a team of NOAA biologists and chemists received a sample of the orange matter early Saturday. "We have determined these are small invertebrate eggs, although we cannot tell which species," Rice said.

Icy View dogs attacked by musk ox

Bv Diana Haecker

In separate incidents two dogs were injured and one dog was killed by musk oxen in Icy View. The latest incident occurred in the early morning hours of August 11, when Keith Conger woke up to a blood-curdling scream coming from one of his three dogs outside his house on Spinning Rock Road. Conger said he could tell by the sound his dogs made that there was something wrong. By the time he went outside, all the musk ox left was a set of tracks and a bleeding dog. "We didn't hear anything before, but judging by the tracks, it walked up the alley between the houses into our yard and went right up to the dog and gored it," Conger said

Bolo, a three-year-old skijor dog, sustained four wounds. The most severe was a gash to the chest that went deep but stopped just short of puncturing the lungs. There were three more holes punctured into the dog. "Lucky thing that Dr. Leedy was in town to operate on Bolo, or the dog would not have made it," Conger said.

dering crab. The Inaliq is a steel-hulled LCM-6 originally built as a landing craft for the U.S. Navy in 1968. NSEDC's 39-foot F/V Norton Bay and 38-foot F/V Golovnin Bay also serve as tenders, and the Besboro, a 33-foot barge supports buying and processing operations for fishermen in the region.

"I felt the crunch when Unalakleet fishermen wanted to fish, but Elim and Golovin filled up every boat we sent," Huhta said. Commercial chum salmon catches in July in the Elim and Golovin subdistricts were the best since the 1980s, reported Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. Fishermen in both subdistricts benefited from above average runs of chum salmon in 2010 and this year. However, low chum runs kept the Golovin subdistrict closed to commercial chum fishing for most of the 2000s, according to ADF&G reports.

Tender availability concerns this season were reflected in a July 1 press release from Menard announcing a 36-hour extension of a commercial salmon fishing opening in the Elim subdistrict. He noted that severe weather conditions had prevented tendering vessels and ice supplies from reaching the fishing grounds on June 30. "Strong catches of chum salmon yesterday resulted in the tendering vessel Tia and buying station Besboro reaching capacity late last night, and buying operations were temporarily suspended," Menard wrote. "However, the tendering vessels Golovnin Bay and Egavik are now en route to the fishing grounds to support buying operations in Elim Subdistrict.... Fishermen are reminded to not deploy their commercial gear until tendering vessels reach the area and can receive deliveries...."

NSEDC board member Eugene Asicksik of Shaktoolik said he thinks barges with refrigerated seawater (RSW) systems would be a better situation than another large tender. An RSW system eliminates the need for ice, he added. The RSW systems aboard barges chill fish and keep them chilled while awaiting a tender. Asicksik suggested the staff make an inquiry about RSW barges now because it takes a year to obtain them.

"I think an RSW barge is needed for Elim," said Elim representative Oscar Takak, Sr. "I would not want to go through another fishing season the way this was."

The board approved a motion by Asicksik to direct staff to look into three barges with RSW systems, including one for crab, and to authorize the board's executive committee to move forward.

Nome representative Don Stiles suggested that NSEDC buy another landing craft type of tender that can move on its own and be used for hauling freight to save transportation costs in the region. Board members Dean Peterson of Golovin and William (Middy) Johnson of Unalakleet voiced support for that option. The board approved Stiles' motion to have staff look into adding a vessel not only for tendering fish but also for other purposes.

Funds for Unaatuq

Janis Ivanoff, NSEDC's president and CEO informed the board of a capital call for $50,000 from Unaatuq, LLC for construction work at Pilgrim Hot Springs. A consortium composed of NSEDC, the Bering Straits Native Corp., Sitnasuak Native Corp, Kawerak, Inc., Mary's Igloo Native Corp., Teller Native Corp. and White Mountain Native Corp owns Unaatuq. Last year Unaatuq successfully bid $1.9 million for the 320-acre property in an auction in U.S. Federal Bankruptcy Court as partial fulfillment of the obligations of the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska in bankruptcy pro-

Ivanoff said $12,000 of the capital call is to be used to refurbish a facility to lease to the University of Alaska for use by personnel who are conducting research at Pilgrim Hot Springs, and the remainder is for other purposes. NSEDC's share of the capital call is $11,000, which is below the amount required for board approval, she noted.

Other board actions

The board approved a recommendation from the scholarship committee to increase this year's scholarships budget by $60,000.

The board also approved the purcontinued on page 17 Speaking with his neighbors, Conger said that his neighbor Pat Callahan's dog also had been attacked and injured by a musk ox recently. While the sight of musk oxen is nice from a certain distance, the neighbors are unsettled because the animals are moving closer and closer to human settlements.

There has been a herd of musk oxen camped out on the south side of Icy View for a while. "The neighbors on the outer edge of Icy View have musk oxen in their yards all the time," Conger said. But with a neighborhood full of kids and the three incidents of musk ox violence against dogs, concerns are mounting. "We keep an eye on the musk ox because we have lots of little kids out here, a dozen to 15 kids on our street alone," said Conger.

"My concern is the musk oxen are getting closer, they're getting habitualized to people." Conger said he called the police department to report the incident and was told to contact the Alaska Department of Fish and Game office. The office was also contacted for this report, but with area biologist Tony Gorn on leave, other biologists at ADF&G wouldn't comment on the incidents.

The worst incident happened almost two months ago, when a single musk ox walked into Icy View, to Kirk and Colleen Reynolds' house and killed their dog Samson. Colleen Reynolds said that she heard a ruckus outside her house at Watchglass and looked out the window just in time to see that a musk ox tossed their two-year old dog around like a ragdoll. The dog was tied up on a running line and ran to hide under a shop building, where the musk ox cornered him, but the dog had no chance and was killed. She said that after all the years living in Icy View, this was the first time that musk ox just walked into the subdivision and attacked dogs.

Reynolds called the Nome police and told them what happened. The musk ox still lingered around and the responding police officers succeeded to run the animal out of the neighborhood cern that the animals are coming too close for comfort. Unlike other wildlife, musk ox tend to stand their ground when approached and are not an easy animal to chase away.

Police chief John Papasodora said it is nothing out of the ordinary that wild animals come into populated areas. "We have received calls where musk oxen have trapped people in their homes, or are butting their heads against the house walls and attacking dogs," said Papasodora. "But we're living in Nome, a place where wild animals coexist with the human population."

He said his police officers responded to two calls where they removed the musk ox from residential areas, using noise devices. He also cautioned to not put yourself at risk, but to use common sense, not get too close to the animal and call the police if the musk ox acts aggressively. "We have to try to scare them away and take any action including the option to terminate the animal, but that is hard to do in a residential area," Papasodora said.

New Community Service Officer patrols Nome

By Diana Haecker

A new Nome Police Department employee wearing a khaki uniform and a friendly smile, is the new "weapon" in NPD's arsenal in the battle against alcohol and drug induced problems in downtown Nome. With a badge that says "Community Service Officer" Lance Cannon is the newest hire at NPD to be an additional set of eyes and ears on Front Street and the beaches, to do community outreach and to alleviate some of the pressure on the other police officers by doing foot patrols and bar checks. "This position really wants me to be proactive and to build relationships," Cannon said.

Nome Police Chief John Papasodora said that it has been several years since a community service officer has patrolled Nome's streets. "The need was identified to put a CSO to work again, and the Nome Common Council and the city manager requested that we re-establish the position," Papasodora said. He explained that the position has a broad scope of work, which entails patrolling Front Street, the beaches, the seawall and side roads and alleys, doing school visits and providing alcohol and drug education, as well as functioning as a communications of-

The Nome Police Department has ten sworn officers and even when fully staffed at two officers per shift, it is not enough to go on foot patrols and do bar checks. This is where the CSO comes in.

then send them home either by cab or we take them home," Cannon says.

However, sometimes the situation is worse and calls for what is known as a Title 47. "A Title 47 is when we have exhausted all those options, when the person is unresponsive and can't tell me if they have a safe place to go. Some are so incapacitated that they don't even know where their home is or if they have a home," Cannon said. The person is then taken-either by patrol car or ambulance-to the Emergency Room at the hospital and then for a 12-hour hold at Anvil Mountain Correctional Center. "There are days when we could fill up AMCC with Title 47s," said Cannon. "It is not uncommon that the same person ends up at AMCC twice a week."

Cannon said the top five list of problems he has to deal with is public drunkenness, domestic violence, driving under the influence, alcohol induced bar fights, curfew and minor consuming alcohol violations.

While a lot of calls concern adults, Cannon also pays attention to youth. The most prevalent youth offenses are vandalism, graffiti, tobacco abuse, minors consuming alcohol, substance abuse, and most of it stems from boredom. But overall, he said, Nome has great kids. Speaking to them and making connections helps him understand what they are going through. Some kids who still roam the streets close to or after curfew, he said, oftentimes have a reason. "The kids who are struggling may have a home where mom and dad are not being able to make ends meet, where there is no food, or it's cold. Or they don't want to be home because there's drinking going on and fighting," Cannon said.

If he runs into kids still out there close to curfew, he will talk to them and take them home and speak with parents. "For the most part, when we get the kids home, things quiet down.'

He said that sometimes all it takes is the willingness to listen. "I found that kids just want somebody who listens. If they trust you, they will talk to you. Part of my job is to build relationships and to find out what's going on," he said.

Although things are still far from being perfect, Cannon said that in the 19 years he's lived here, Nome has come a long way in terms of offering and to build relationships." - Lance Cannon

"This position really wants me to be proactive

Cannon may be new to this particular job, but he's an old hand at dealing with the social problems. Cannon has worked for 10 years in youth corrections facilities, including the Nome Youth Facility and the McLaughlin Youth Center in Anchorage. Before joining NPD, he worked for six years as a supervising caseworker for Kawerak's Children and Family Services. Prior to arriving in Nome in 1990, Cannon worked as an activities coordinator with the Boys and Girls Club in Texas. He has a two-year certificate in rural services from UAF and attended two years of mass communications and fine arts at the Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls, Texas.

After only one and a half months on the job at NPD, Cannon identified alcohol as the number one public enemy. "I find myself dealing mostly with intoxicated people on Front Street. That most definitely takes up most of my time," Cannon said.

In a typical incident, a call comes into dispatch for a 1056 — a welfare check. When he arrives at the scene, Cannon first looks around at what's going on. "I want to see what I'm getting into rather than just walking into what may be a bad situation," he

Once he knows what he's facing, he walks up to the person, identifies himself and tries to get the person up and talking. "The goal is to get the person into a sober and clean environment, so I ask where they live and kids things to do. "There are summer programs by various organizations in town, there is Summercise, camping programs, Nome Eskimo Community has summer programs, there is the skate park now and Al [Burgo's] efforts with 907 Bush," Cannon said.

Still, there are some kids who don't want to be involved and he keeps working on finding a way to get through to them.

His uniform is khaki instead of the blue color of the regular police officers. This, he says is a great conversation starter. "The kids especially like to talk about my uniform and they also want to know why I don't carry a gun," Cannon said. Not being a certified police officer, Cannon is not issued a gun. "So far I have not felt threatened," Cannon said.

He points out that he has a great working relationship with the other officers and can count on their backup. But he hopes for more training to employ pepper spray or Tasers. 'Sometimes people just don't have a good day or a good night and situations can turn suddenly violent," he said. So far he manages with what he has learned in his years of working in detention and as a social worker. "My approach to use my words and demeanor is still the best tool to deal with a person who's intoxicated and to make clear that you want to help instead of intensifying the situation, Cannon says.

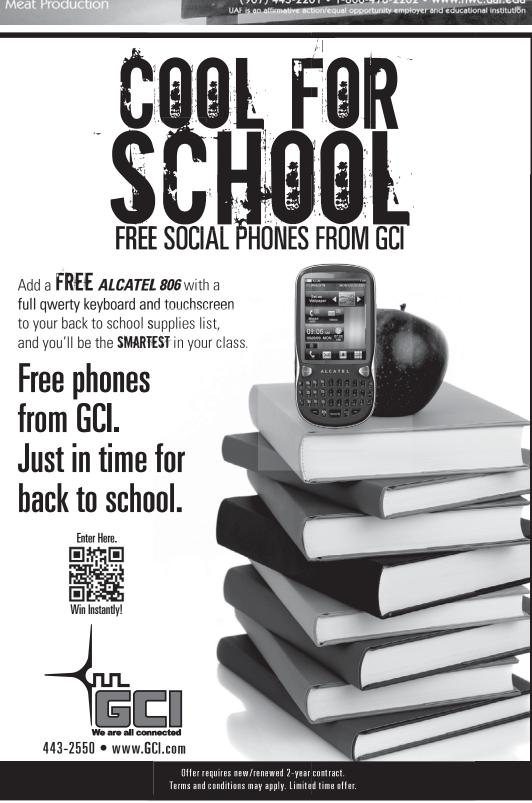

For now, the position is semi-seasonal, chief Papasodora said. The position is not funded as a line-item in the police budget, but is absorbed in the general budget.

Cannon emphasized that he really would like to get into the schools and in a collaborative effort with Nome Public Schools provide alcohol and drug education. This is something that Chief Papasodora also envisioned, but he has to figure out how to keep the CSO position viable yearround. "We are still grinding out the rough edges," said Papasodora. "We are evaluating the CSO position right now, see how it impacts our organization and what level of service it provides to community," said Papasodora.

Depending on this evaluation, the position will survive as a seasonal gig or expand into a full time job.

Regional polar bear harvest quota stays at 58 animals

By Sandra L. Medearis
A joint United States-Russia Polar Bear Commission meeting in Moscow last month affirmed that the two countries will continue to split a harvest quota of 58 polar bears established in June last year. The 58 bears are subject to review annually and divided evenly between the two countries, 29 to each side.

Heavy rains knock out salmon counting projects

All Norton Sound salmon escapement enumeration projects were knocked out by heavy rains last week, reports Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. Only the test fish projects remained operational. Most projects went down on the evening of Aug. 11 or the morning of Aug. 12. High water flooded out the weirs and made visibility impossible for accurate counts from the towers. Menard said the projects were expected to resume operation within one to three days. The following report is derived from Menard's weekly update on Norton Sound fisheries.

The total commercial salmon catch for Norton Sound through Aug. 12 was 130 kings, 283 sockeyes, 106,747 chums, 7,119 pinks and 28,893 silvers. The silver run is tracking average when compared to previous years, but below average when compared to record silver runs in recent years. The commercial silver catch is expected to be closer to the lower end of the projected harvest of 60,000 to 90,000 silvers.

Unalakleet subdistrict

Subsistence salmon gillnet fishing and beach seining is open seven days a week in the Unalakleet subdistrict. The commercial fishing schedule is two 48-hour periods per week from 6 p.m. Sundays until 6 p.m. Tuesdays and from 6 p.m. Wednesdays until 6 p.m. Fridays. The commercial harvest to date is 77 kings, 199 sockeyes, 32,390 chums, 6,273 pinks and 15,832 silvers. The silver catches have been tracking similar to last year with average catches. Historically the average midpoint of the harvest was last week.

Catches at the Unalakleet River Test Fish project through Aug. 12 totaled 132 kings, 2,478 chums, 2,129 pinks, 9 sockeyes and 197 silvers. Silver catches this year are comparable to last year, but are less than one-half the recent 5-year average. The overall rank of the silver catch is 10th best in the 27-year project history. The average midpoint at the net is Aug. 16. This is an ADF&G project with assistance from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

Escapement goals at the North River tower are kings, 1,200-2,600; chums, no goal established; pinks, 25,000; and silvers, 550-1,100 (aerial survey goal). Cumulative counts through Aug. 11 were 864 kings, 18,812 chums, 123,142 pinks and 1,340 silvers. Silver counts are the second poorest for this date. The average midpoint at the tower is Aug. 13. Telemetry studies show about 15 percent of the silver run to the Unalakleet River passes the North River tower. NSEDC operates the project with assistance from ADF&G.

No weir escapement goals have been established for the Unalakleet River floating weir. The project was flooded out on Aug. 8, two days before its scheduled closure. Cumulative counts this season were 1,113 kings, 108,377 chums, 365,121 pinks, 185 sockeyes and 10,417 silvers.

This is the second year of the project. In 2010 the last day of counting was July 31, and the cumulative silver count was 5,382 compared to 4,570 silvers through July 31 this year. This is a cooperative project of ADF&G, the Native Village of Unalakleet, U.S. Bureau of Land Management and NSEDC. Major funding for the project is provided by U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Office of Subsistence Management

Shaktoolik subdistrict

Subsistence salmon gillnet fishing and beach seining is open seven days a week in the Shaktoolik subdistrict. The commercial fishing schedule is two 48-hour periods per week from 6 p.m. Sundays until 6 p.m. Tuesdays and from 6 p.m. Wednesdays until 6 p.m. Fridays. The commercial harvest to date is 39 kings, 68 sockeyes, 23,864 chums, 29 pinks and 7,392 silvers. The silver catches were much better this past week, and the cumulative silver catch is about one-third ahead of last year for mid-August. Historically the average midpoint of the harvest was last week.

Norton Bay subdistrict

The commercial fishing schedule in the Norton Bay subdistrict is two 48-hour periods per week from 6 p.m. Saturdays until 6 p.m. Mondays and from 6 p.m. Tuesdays until 6 p.m. Thursdays. The commercial harvest to date is 3 kings, 9 sockeyes, 7,016 chums, 652 pinks, and 3,451 silvers. The silver catch is a record for the subdistrict. Historically the average midpoint of the harvest was last week

No escapement goals have been established for the Inglutalik River tower, a cooperative project between NSEDC and ADF&G. This is the first year of the project. Cumulative counts through Aug. 7 were 1,468 kings, 61,443 chums, 450,823 pinks and 519 silvers. High water and poor visibility have affected counts since the end of July.

Elim subdistrict

The commercial fishing schedule in the Elim subdistrict is two 48-hour periods per week from 6 p.m. Sundays until 6 p.m. Tuesdays and from 6 p.m. Thursdays until 6 p.m. Saturdays. The commercial harvest to date is 4 kings, 7 sockeyes, 23,417 chums, 165 pinks and 1,560 silvers. The silver harvest is average, but is about one-half that of the last two years, which had record silver harvests. Historically the average midpoint of the harvest is this week.

Escapement goals at the Kwiniuk River tower are kings, 300-550; chums, 11,500-23,000; pinks, 8,400; and silvers, 650-1,300 (aerial survey goal). Cumulative counts through Aug. 11 were 48 kings, 31,562 chums, 29,375 pinks and 1,482 silvers. Silver escapement is seventh out of 11 years of counting during silver season. The average first quarter point is Aug. 11 and the midpoint is Aug. continued on page 16

The goal of the July 27-29 meeting was to continue implementation of a bilateral treaty for the Alaska-Chukotka polar bear population that inhabits the Bering and Chukchi seas. The group, formed in 2007, comprises representatives of the United States and Russian Federation to safeguard polar bears and to advance federal, state and Native interests in polar bear conservation and management.

According to a statement from the commission, the quota represents a historic step toward protecting the ability of the Native peoples of Alaska and Chukotka to take polar bears for traditional subsistence purposes, and ensuring that polar bear harvest is sustainable.

The Alaska Nanuuq (polar bear) Commission, represented by 15 communities, is developing the U.S. portion of the management plan in conjunction with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Members of the ANC have been seeking input from villages, according to Jack Omelak of Nome, ANC deputy director, who said marine and climactic conditions are factors.

"We are looking towards developing a regional allocation instead of a village by village, which will account for those villages which may not have historically harvested bears, but may have the opportunity to do so, as changing ecologies may affect migration and feeding areas," Omelak said in an e-mail.

Regional distribution would allow flexibility in allocation rather than by individual villages. There are three regions in the U.S. plan: one, Point Hope, Point Lay, Kivalina and Kotzebue; two, Shishmaref, Wales, Little Diomede, Brevig Mission and King Island; three, Gambell and Savoonga. A multiyear quota system, announced by the bilateral commission, will be used to manage polar bear harvest in the United States starting in 2013, critical in the development of a shared harvest management plan, according to Omelak.

The multi-year allocation allows the three regions to distribute the allocation of 145 bears over a five-year period. It is important to get the regional, multi-year management plan underway as hunters begin to conform to the new management structure, Omelak explained. Subsistence harvesting of Alaska-Chukotka polar bears was banned in Chukotka in the 1950s

The ANC is planning to establish a regional coordinator who will oversee reporting to ensure that real time data on polar bears is gathered, stored, and transferred so that polar bear management can react quickly to emerging harvest situations. For example, changing ice patterns affect availability and which villages have the opportunity to harvest and be able to take a relatively large number of bears, Omelak explained. The ANC plans to implement a plan by which regions would be able to transfer unused portions of their allocation

Scientists say this year's ice observations by local reports as well as satellite tracking show that low values for ice content set over the past four summers are continuing. July set a new record low for the month during the satellite date collection, despite a slowing down of ice loss during the later half of the month as weather changed to cooler conditions

Nome Protects Public Health with Smoke-Free Ordinance

The city is following current trends in America and Alaska

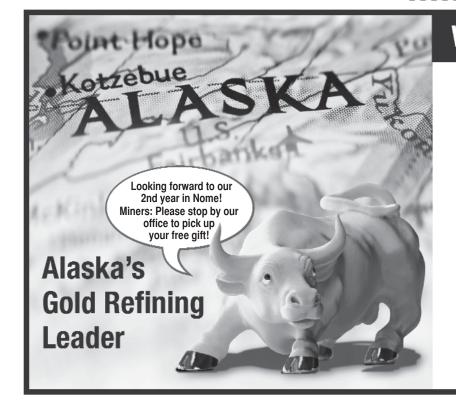

More than half the states in the U.S. have moved to eradicate smoking in public places and workplaces. As of July 1, 2011, 29 states have laws in effect which convert restaurants and bars to being 100% smoke-free.

In 2007, Anchorage voters chose to ban smoking in all enclosed workplaces, including bars, restaurants, and private clubs. The next year Juneau followed suit. Barrow, Dillingham, Fairbanks, Haines Borough, Juneau, Klawock, Petersburg, Sitka, Skagway Borough, and Unalaska all have smoke-free legislation currently in place.

On Sept. 20th of this year, Nome will be joining the movement toward smoke-free workplaces. Passed on May 23rd, Ordinance No. 11-04-02 limits smoking to outside of enclosed public spaces and 20 feet away from bar entrances or entrances to buildings owned or controlled by the City of Nome.

Paid for by the Nome Community Center through a grant from the Alaska DHSS Tobacco Prevention & Control Program.

Mary's Igloo holds Elder and Youth camp in Teller

During July 17-22, Mary's Igloo Traditional Council in Teller had their Third Annual Elder and Youth Cultural Camp. The camp was sponsored by grants received through First Nations Development Institute, Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation and Norton Sound Health Corporation's CAMP Program. There were 14 youth participants ages 11-18, four Elders, and seven chaperones who attended this year's camp. Seven boats helped haul camping gear and camp participants up river to Bluestone where the group camped for six days.

While at camp, the group was able to visit the Mary's Igloo area and the Mary's Igloo Shelter Cabin that was recently built. The group also traveled to Graphite Bay and Cobblestone and learned local history of the area. Youth learned the skills of setting a net, cutting fish, and putting away salmon. Youth and Elders worked together harvesting and cooking sour dock greens. Youth learned Qawiaraq values and the importance of respecting Elders, the land, and the animals. Youth learned about boating, fire, and bear safety, and Qawiaraq names for the animals and plants in the area. One of the highlights of each evening was listening to stories told by the camp Elders.

On the last night, the community of Teller was invited to attend a potluck at camp. Seventy-eight people attended the potluck where everyone feasted on half dried fish, boiled fish heads and eggs, smoked fish, seal meat, chicken salad, potato salad, spaghetti, beef stew soup, sour docks (greens), and Jello pudding. During the potluck, the group played Eskimo baseball. Many of the youth thought the camp was too short and did not want it to end that soon.

fuse ice cover in the Beaufort and Chukchi seas has sped the loss of ice especially in the Chukchi Sea. The loss of ice affects the ability of the bears to hunt ring seal, a primary food source for area polar bears, therefore affecting the number of polar bears in local harvest areas, thus the need for flexibility in assigning the 29 bears for each side.

The Alaska Nanuuq Commission formed in 1994 to represent Native interests regarding polar bears. A treaty signed in 2000 by Native peoples on both sides of the Chukchi and Bering seas, along with government entities, formally recognized the need to share management of the common resource and to protect Native cultural and traditional uses, but both sides had been laying the groundwork for over 20 years. The treaty restored the right to Chukotka Natives to hunt polar bear, a cause supported by Alaska Natives. Implementation of the treaty in 2007 produced the U.S.-Russia Polar Bear Commission.

The USF&WS designated the polar bear a threatened species in 2008, citing changing sea ice conditions as having a negative impact on these sea mammals and their prey as regards numbers and behavior. The agency estimates that polar bears worldwide number between 20,000 and 25,000.

Omelak attended the meeting in Moscow along with Charlie Brower, who represents Barrow on the ANC and is alternate commissioner, U.S. delegation. Charles Johnson, U.S. co-chair of the bilateral commission and ANC executive director, was unable to travel to the July meeting.

Hit! Truck! Score! Post season softball tourney in Nome

By Amber Ryan

The softball field was flooded with rain. Mud puddles created small creeks from one dugout to the other. The catcher of each team had to take a splash to the face every few pitches. The bases were slippery. It was a wet one. This softball season was also full of wind, wind, wind and more rain.

Five women's teams and eight men's teams competed last week for the post season softball tournament from Monday through Friday. The men's teams included: Polar Tigers, Anchor Tavern, Gold Beach Miners, Breakers, Outsiders, RJ's Auto, ANB and NS Construction. The women's teams included: Bush 907, Ball Breakers, Bering Air, MC Hammers, and Q-Trucking Mother Truckers.

After days of playing in the wind and the rain, championship night was a great night for a few games of softball. The men and women were lucky to play on a night with no wind and no rain. In the North field, Gold Beach Miners men played against Breakers men. In the South field, Q-Trucking Mother Truckers played against Bering Air women. The Mother Truckers and Gold Beach Miners both had to win the first game to have a chance to play a second game to try for the championship win. Bering Air and Breakers men did not lose a game during the tournament. The opposing team had to beat them two games in one night.

It was an exciting night for all four teams competing for the winning title. Gold Beach Miners ended the season with 19 wins and 1 loss. The Mother Truckers ended the season with 18 wins and 2 losses. Both teams holding the number 1 seed prior to the start of the tournament found themselves in the losing bracket. Gold Beach Miners lost to Breakers, giving Breakers a comfy seat in the winning bracket and a one game cushion to sit on. Bering Air had beat Mother Truckers and were also in the winning bracket.

Gold Beach Miners won their first game 17-7. Game 2 was a close one. Gold Beach Miners won the second game 13-12. Breakers had their tiebreaking run on third base. But Gold Beach Miners got them out before he could make it home to tie the game. In the south field, Bering Air lost to Mother Truckers in game one with a score of 11-14. During the second ting, running, and scoring. They upset Bering Air with a score of 21-6. Congratulations to the Gold Beach Miners and Q-Trucking Mother game the Mother Truckers were hit-

Truckers 2011 softball champs. Gold Beach Miners, Q-Trucking and Bering Air will compete in Anchorage during the 2011 State Softball Tournament this weekend, August 20-21. Good luck to all Nome athletes!

Safeway hires new store manager

By Anna Hahn

Tim Motis has been in the Safeway family for a total of 12 years. Taking on the position of assistant manager three different times in three distinct locations, he has decided that it is high time to take on the responsibility of store manager in the community of Nome.

Calling Colorado his first home, Motis attended college at Colorado State University and graduated with a degree in wildlife biology. Later he found himself working in various nooks of Alaska for Fish and Game as a biologist for a grand total of eight years before finding his niche with Safeway.

Throughout his 20 years in Alaska, Motis has spent 12 of them in Kodiak, several in Soldotna, and settled in Homer for a bit before finally venturing up north to Nome. Moving here with his wife Stacie, daughter Anna Marie, 13, and sons Aaron, 10, and Jonathan, 18. Jonathan is currently attending the U.S. Coast Guard Academy in Connecticut, Motis notes, "We're really adjusting well. It's a nice community, and we're ready to get involved with it."

As for his new job, Motis is excited to get his feet wet and serve Nome to the highest standards, mentioning enthusiastically that his goals for this branch are, "To provide a good service to the community, to keep prices low and the shelves full, and to always have a helpful staff to assist customers with what they need." However, with his eagerness to jump in comes a few specific drawbacks. "The high turnover rate for employees and keeping a consistent staff," Motis explains, "is very difficult. Additionally, dealing with freight issues and not knowing if the our next shipment will be coming in on time is interesting.

In his personal life, Motis enjoys hunting, flying (he has his commercial pilot's license), bonding with his daughter over her love of horses, and sharing the dream of shooting a musk ox with his son. As for roadblocks Motis has come up against, he states, "Just the road closed signs. Everybody's been great, everybody's been friendly, and it's a very welcoming community. I'm glad to be here, and I'm looking forward to the Nome Adventure.'

The Elementary school was built with NO ASBESTOS products and this remains to be the case. Nome Beltz was built using Asbestos Products and over the years a majority of it has been removed and or encapsulated. We had an independent contractor do our required 3 Year re-inspection and he found all remaining Asbestos to be well maintained and in no danger of release. We will continue to do our in-house inspection every 6 months but again anticipate no problems. There is a copy of the inspection report maintained at the District Office available for review by the public. Bill Potter, Nome Public Schools, LEA

How to live to be 97 years old

for taking care of others. She re-

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Maude Pierce Coggin was born June 9, 1914. She passed away last Thursday, August 11, 2011.

Mrs. Coggin is my grandmother. Like most grandmothers who have an impact of their family, my grandmother's life had a profound influence over my life and choice of work. In many ways she taught this doctor something about what being healthy really means.

She made it to 97 years of age. But do not let her age fool you the way it often fooled even her doc-She never let her age show. She was a "young" 97, physically active with a sharp mind even to her last days of life. She drove a car well into her 90s. She independently walked into a dealership and bought a new car at age 93. When family recommended she move into assisted living or a nursing home, she would wink and say, places are for old people.'

What was her secret? How does a person increase the possibility of reaching, and more importantly, enjoying the ninth decade of life?

My grandmother had good genes. Her mother lived to age 97 as well. But a healthy family history was not her secret. On the surface my grandmother did all the things connected with good health. She remained physically active daily, she never smoked, she fostered meaningful relationships, she ate a healthy diet, often dividing her portions in half, she maintained an active faith in God, and she kept her mind alert by playing music and writing, most often using an old typewriter.

As a physician, the thing that strikes me about my grandmother's vigor was not that her health was the result of healthy behaviors, but that her healthy behaviors were the natural result of something much more profound, something I cannot prescribe but will attempt to describe.

Mrs. Maude Coggin was known mained physically active by tending to the needs of people in her community. She fostered relationships with people who were in some ways hard to love. She was known for visiting a nursing home and asking the staff, "Which resident does not receive any visitors?" That is who she would visit. Often when she went out to restaurants, she would eat half portions; the other half would be taken to another elder who could not leave home. She shared her gift of music with others playing piano and violin for her congregations. I am told she learned to play on a Stradivarius violin. She was a prolific writer. Maude Coggin restricted her writing to small devotional journals, personal letters, and typed cards (in

This, I believe, was the secret to her longevity. In pouring herself out for others, she naturally lived in a way that was healthy for her.

an age of email, she typed her own cards), all to provide memorable doses of courage and comfort to oth-

Twenty years ago she typed a motivational letter to me when I was in college. The letter included a short poem called "Drinking From My Saucer" based on a line from the old Jewish Psalm 23. The closing line of her poem reads:

"May I not be too busy to help another bear his load,

"Then I will keep drinking from my saucer, because my cup has overflowed."

For 20 years I have kept that typed poem in my Bible as a reminder of the important things in life.

Maude Pierce Coggin

On the night before she passed away, I had the privilege of reading the poem back to my grandmother. A stroke had taken her ability to speak and she had already begun to struggle for air, but when I read the last line, she looked at me over the oxygen mask and smiling with her eyes, as only eyes can smile, she nodded yes, as if to say, "This is

My grandmother knew one of the secrets to living a long, meaningful life. She knew that often what we do for others has a bigger effect on our own longevity than what we do for ourselves. While it's sad for me to see the passing of such a special elder, I am thankful for the legacy she leaves behind.

Saying it Sincerely

By Fr. Ross Tozzi, St Joseph Catholic Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association Kateri Tekakwitha

Jesus came to set people free from the bonds of sin. Some accepted his message. Others rejected him and sought to crucify him. When a person is faithful to God's call, one often discovers the wrath of close friends and family.

Kateri Tekakwitha was an Indian woman born in 1656 in upper state New York. Her heart burned with the fire of faith to follow Jesus, but the pursuit of her faith caused much division in her own family.

In the 17th century, Jesuit priests came to the New World as missionaries to spread the light of the Gospel. But other European settlers came with other ideas. These new ideas were often in conflict with the native ways and traditions. Inadvertently, the Europeans also brought illnesses and diseases. Small pox devastated the Indians who had no natural resistance. Kateri's mother and father and young brother all died of the disease. Kateri recovered but she was scarred for life and partially blinded.

She was adopted by an uncle. In due time, aunts in the family tried to arrange a marriage between Kateri and a young warrior. The faith growing inside of Kateri instinctively told her to save herself for Jesus. Making this stand based on an inner conviction caused dissension in the household. Kateri lost favor in the household and was treated like a slave. Instead of returning ill will for hostility, she turned the other cheek. In doing so, she softened the hearts that were hardened against her.

When Kateri had the opportunity to talk to one of the Jesuit Missionaries, she explained that she wanted to be baptized and to become a Christian. She took instruction in the faith and was baptized at the age of 20. As a faithful Catholic, Kateri set herself apart from her tribal community. Others responded with anger, intolerance and cruelty. She was laughed at, taunted, and made the subject of obscene gestures.

When Kateri honored the Sabbath by refusing to work on Sunday, she stirred resentment. When she took her rosary out to pray, she was told to put it away. When she took part in religious activities, her persecution increased. A young warrior even threatened to kill her if she did not relent in her Christian ways. Kateri remained calm and detached from the threat of violence. But things grew worse; a suspicious aunt suspected Kateri of sexual impropriety and made Kateri's life as miserable as she possibly could.

Recognizing the trials that Christ underwent, Kateri took things in stride. She felt that in comparison to the passion and death of our Lord, her trials were minor inconveniences. Because of her gentle spirit and her choice to respond maturely with love, Kateri stayed above the fray. She persevered in running the good race and keeping her eyes focused on Jesus.

Concerned for Kateri's safety, those who knew her well prayed to heaven for a solution. A relative and two other respected Indian Catholics took Kateri to the Sault Sainte Marie Mission 400 miles away in Canada. When Kateri's uncle learned of her departure, he was absolutely furious. One cannot help but be reminded that following Jesus faithfully is often a cause for division. "Do you think that I have come to establish peace on the earth? No, I tell you, but rather division. From now on a household of five will be divided." (Luke 12:51-52a)

At the Mission, Kateri, the Lily of the Mohawks, blossomed in her faith. She was amiable, pious, resigned to the will of God, her holiness shined. She asked the Jesuit priest at the mission to allow her to make a vow of perpetual virginity and chastity. Such a vow was totally unprecedented. The very idea was foreign to her Indian way of life. Kateri wanted to be the spouse of the divine bridegroom and she convinced the priest she was ready. At the age of 23, Kateri consecrated her virginity, her purity, her very soul to Christ. A little over a year later, Kateri died at the age of 24. Following her death, the scars from her child hood disease left her. This miraculous sign helped many of the Indians of that era to believe in Jesus. Through the intercession of Kateri, many prayed to Jesus for healing and received miraculous cures.

Kateri's life is an example for everyone. This young woman turned the other cheek. She met hostility with love. She refused to return ill will for the hatred shown her. In short, she preached the Gospel by her actions. Her life reminds us that we are called to a life of holiness.

Dock Walk

Harbormaster Joy Baker has sent a news round up of what is happening at the Port of Nome.

In the past week, a lot was happening at the port. At the causeway, the Russian research ship Geo Arctic anchored for the better part of last week. Then, on Friday night, the German cruise ship M/S Bremen again visited Nome with visitors disembarking and taking on a new load of guests for their trip around the Northwest Passage. The Coast Guard Cutter Spar came in on Saturday evening and left Monday morning.

Since Nome is the source of the best quality gravel material on the west coast of Alaska, a gravel barge came in to pick up loads of gravel heading for Alakanuk, located 15 miles upstream from the Yukon River mouth. In the harbor, three landing craft came in to shuttle village cargo to Little Diomede, Unalakleet, Kotzebue and Northeast Cape at St. Lawrence Island. The Crowley lighter fuel barge "Nachik" came in to discharge fuel in the harbor. The Alaska Department of Fish and Game research trawler Pandalus is in and out of the harbor on a weekly basis as they are running surveys in Norton Sound. The Pandalus was scheduled to come into Nome again Monday evening. With crabbing season over, most of the fishing fleet are out to look for and fish halibut.

A four-person team of Jetski drivers came to Nome on their via Kodiak and are now on their way to attempt to drive them from Nome to Wales and on to Big Diomede.

Golovin subdistrict

The most recent commercial fishing period in the Golovin subdistrict ended at 6 p.m. Aug. 14. No commercial fishing schedule had been set for the subdistrict by Aug. 13. The commercial harvest to date is 7 kings, 20,070 chums and 658 silvers. The silver harvest is slightly below average and only one-quarter of last year's record catch.

Escapement goals at the Niukluk River tower are pinks, 10,500; chums, minimum of 23,000; kings, minimum of 100 (combined Fish River and Boston Creek aerial survey); and silvers, 2,400-7,200. Cumulative counts through Aug. 11 were 18 kings, 23,230 chums, 15,149 pinks and 873 silvers. Silver passage ranks seventh out of 17 years for this date. The average first quarter point at the tower is Aug. 12 and the midpoint is Aug. 21. This is an ADF&G project with assistance from NSEDC.

Nome subdistrict

Subsistence set gillnet schedule for silver season is in effect in the Nome subdistrict. The schedule is from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Saturday in the marine waters. Effective at 6 p.m. Aug. 15, subsistence set gillnet fishing is open seven days a week in the marine waters. The fresh water subsistence area set gillnet schedule is from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday.

The escapement goal at the Nome River weir is chums, 2,900-4,300; and pinks, 3,150 (odd-numbered year). Cumulative counts through Aug. 11 were 7 kings, 3,284 chums, 13,562 pinks, 1 sockeye and 288 silvers. The silver count ranks eighth out of 17 years through this date. The average first quarter point is Aug. 21. This project is operated by ADF&G with assistance from NSEDC.

The Snake River weir escapement goal is 1,600-2,500 chums. Cumulative counts through Aug. 11 were 1 king, 4,233 chums, 6,488 pinks and 61 silvers. The silver count ranks 13th out of 17 years for this date. The average first quarter point is Aug. 22. This is an ADF&G project with assistance from NSEDC.

Port Clarence district

Chum salmon catch limits on the Pilgrim River have been waived. The Pilgrim River weir escapement goal (aerial survey at Salmon Lake and Grand Central tributary to Salmon Lake) is 4,000-8,000 sockeyes. Cumulative counts through Aug. 11 were 33 kings, 32,517 chums, 3,076 pinks and 8,151 sockeyes. The sockeye passage is nine times higher than 2009 and five times higher than last year for this date. The average 95 percent point is Aug. 8. The Salmon Lake aerial survey estimate was slightly over 5,000 sockeyes, so escapement was achieved for the first time since 2008.

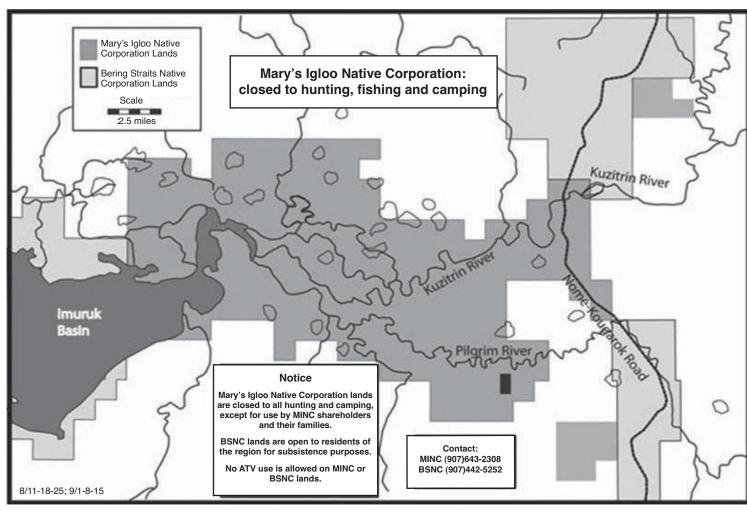

The king passage is tied for last with the 2010 count in 9 years of weir counts. The average 90 percent point is Aug. 12. The chum passage is less than 150 fish behind the record count in 2006 for this date. The average third quarter point is Aug. 14. Pink passage ranks fourth out of the five years of odd-numbered year pink passage. The average 90 percent point is Aug. 4. The weir is operated by NSEDC with assistance from ADF&G.

Kotzebue district

Last week there were only three commercial fishing periods for Kotzebue instead of the normal six periods, because the main runway was closed for construction. The best catch and catch per unit of effort for the season took place Aug. 10 when 55 permit holders caught 14,158 chums. The cumulative harvest tops 176,000 chum salmon by 83 permit holders. The number of permits fished is the highest since 1995, but the cumulative catch has fallen below last year's harvest.

The Kotzebue district commercial catch forecast is 230,000 to 260,000 chum salmon, but with additional runway closures later in the month, this season's catch will likely fall short of the forecast.

The Kobuk River test fish catches last week were the best in project history and no doubt attributable to the limited fishing time in the commercial fishery. Through the morning of Aug. 13, the catch totaled 1,670 chum salmon and 309 sheefish. The chum salmon catch index ranks third best in the 19-year project history.

FRIENDLY PERSUASION — Nome Police Chief John Papasodora ended a standoff between a lone musk ox bull and the Nome police at Belmont Point on Sunday evening with the help of a long pole, prodding the reluctant animal to leave the neighborhood. See story page 6.

Two wounded in murder/suicide attempt

Shorty after noon Sunday August 21 the Nome Police Department received a report of a man attacking a woman near 300 W. Fourth Avenue. When police arrived at the scene they found the victim, Brenda Ahnangnatoguk, 48, in front of the residence. She was suffering from multiple lacerations and a gunshot wound. Nome Volunteer Ambulance arrived on the scene, provided emergency care and transported her to the Norton Sound Hospital.

When police were arriving they saw Al robbie Ahnangnatoguk, 53, fleeing the area with a rifle. He was later located at Norton Sound Hospital suffering from what appeared to be a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the chest.

Police say that preliminary investigation reveals that Al robbie Ahnangnatoguk attacked his sister

Brenda Ahnangnatoguk with an ulu. Brenda was able to flee the residence and gain control of the ulu. However Al roby retrieved a rifle from inside the residence and shot Brenda one time in the upper torso. Brenda also had a finger cut off. Al robbie went back inside the residence where he shot himself in the chest, but was unsuccessful in his attempt at suicide. He fled the residence and was later found at the hospital.

Both Brenda and Al robbie were medivaced to Anchorage for further medical treatment. Police indicate that alcohol was not involved in this incident and they also refused to release the birth dates of the people involved.

Police are continuing to investigate this case and encourage anyone with information about this event to call NPD at 443-5262.

Still, bar and liquor store operators using their collective stationery asked the Nome Common Council Monday to delay the Sept. 20 enforcement of the smoking ordinance

Councilwoman Mary Knodel had her thimble at ready and brought it down on heads, hard years had been long enough to discuss enforcement.

"I don't see why we need to delay this any longer," Knodel said.

Mark Sackett, president of CHARR and representing Nome bar owners and liquor store owners, said they were struggling with interpretation and implementation of the Smoking

Pollution Control law passed by the Council May 23

"We were shocked at the passage of the ordinance, and it is our opinion this should have been presented to the general public for passage or rejection in the form of a ballot, voted on by city streets and in public areas. The discussion considered a number of improvements to the "band-aids" currently being applied to the issue, but came up with no solutions, so far, to the rampant prevalence of alcohol abuse and its manifestations on Front Street and other public areas behind the library, behind the Mini Convention Center, behind the Visitors Center and on the seawall.

Yes, the problem is the responsibility of the community, Papasodora told the Council. He would like to see names of frequent offenders on a "no sell" list for alcohol, with an ordinance on the books to allow him to enforce it, with compliance and cooperation from bars and liquor stores. Additionally Papasodora said he would like to see cooperation from Native corporations in getting treatment established for alcohol abuse. Not that abusers should escape responsibility for their actions—the outrageous behavior and posing a risk to themselves and others—Papasodora stressed.

"There have to be consequences for the behavior, consequences have to be severe enough that they are going to dissuade people from the behavior, to affect personal behavior choices" Papasodora said.

Right now, there is no state law against public drunkenness and the expensive circus it presents, or even a baseline definition of drunkenness. The City can adopt such a law, but may have the expense of prosecuting offenders in court, according to Pa-

Dear Editor:

I am not from Nome so do not know the political landscape other than what I read in the Nugget. However, I feel compelled to speak to a situation that has been treading water over the past several months.

Nome Beltz has in its employ a young man who has rendered his services admirably for the past 7-8 years. Pat Callahan may not have the sunniest external demeanor all the time and he may not bend to the will of the wishes and whims of others. He will, and has, represented the school and community of Nome very well during his tenure. Once past the exterior he is a personable and highly principled individual who loves working with kids and providing positive experiences for them.

I knew Pat professionally at first, and more personally lately, and can vouch for his hard work and able representation. As a coach he has had a very successful run, arguably as good as any coach in Nome-Beltz history. As an Activities Director I work with Pat on the Region 1 Board and he advocates for Nome vocally and follows through in his actions. Nome hosts many invitational tournaments annually and runs a very comprehensive activities program. While maintaining his basketball program and the travel associated with it, Pat still manages to provide leadership in promoting well-organized events. Understanding full well that these events do not happen without the involvement of many, it still takes someone to plan and implement them.

I have watched with amazement the ongoing discussion about the Nome-Beltz Activities Director contract. I'm not sure how the Board of Education thinks this job is best filled, but I'll guarantee you that it isn't one that you plan to hire in September. With cross country and girls' volleyball season already upon you, it's beyond me why a decision hasn't been made and why a person with such positive credentials and experience is left to dangle in the wind. I hope that there is quick resolution to this and that the Board makes a decision that not only rewards great performance, but also the students of Nome-Beltz. Respectfully, Jeff Erickson Bering Strait School District Activities Director

U.S. General Services Administration lowers bid on Nome Federal building

The U.S. General Services Administration is still taking bids during on-line bidding auction to sell the Federal Building at 240 Front Street in Nome. The auction began on June 8, 2011 with an original minimum bid of $300,000. A new suggested bid of $100,000 has been set to draw additional interest in the property. The on-line auction closes September 1, 2011. The starting bid amount does not represent the value of the property but rather provides a starting point for the online auction. The two-story building was constructed in 1958 to house Federal agencies and the U.S. Courts. Currently, the major tenants are the State of Alaska and the U.S. Postal Service.

Wales and White Mountain post offices off the chopping block

The United States Postal Service took 25 post offices off a list of post offices for potential closure. The USPS said that they would not close post offices off the road system, including those in White Mountain and Wales. Sen. Mark Begich met with Anchorage post office officials this week and heard from USPS District Manager for Alaska Diane Horbuchuk that the USPS has already determined 25 Alaska offices off the road system are in the clear and will not be closed. Last month, the USPS announced nearly 3,700 post offices, including 36 in Alaska, had been targeted for possible closure as a way to reduce costs and expenses

Senate holds hearings on oil industry's hiring practices

The Senate Labor & Commerce committee will hold hearings on the oil industry's hiring of Alaskans. Hearings are scheduled for September 6 in Fairbanks and September 8 in Anchorage. The committee's chairman Dennis Eagan said that Alaskans are concerned that at a time of near-record employment in the oil industry, fewer of those jobs are going to Alaskans. Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development figures show more than half of industry new-hires are from out of state. Egan explained that his committee is considering the potential effects of House Bill 110, the governor's proposal to rewrite Alaska's Clear and Equitable Share oil tax law, and seeks to find ways to increase the percentage of Alaskans employed in the industry.

Orange goo in Kivalina is fungi, not microscopic eggs

Researchers with the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration backtracked on their verdict that microscopic eggs caused the ocean in front of Kivalina to turn orange. They found out that it's actually a mass of fungal spores. NPR reports that researchers are not yet sure whether this particular type of rust fungus is one of the 7,800 species of rust fungi that have already been identified. Samples of the orange substance were sent to labs at NOAA's Alaska Fisheries facility, which initially determined that the goo was actually a mass of microscopic eggs, and to NOAA's National Ocean Service Center for Coastal Environmental Health and Biomolecular Research Charleston. Scientists at the South Carolina facility who analyzed the microbiological phenomena with electron scanning microscopes and other equipment "determined that the substance is consistent with spores from a fungi that cause rust," according to a NOAA press release.

Alaska unemployment rate at 7.7 percent

The Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development released preliminary numbers on the state's unemployment rates. In July, 7.7 percent of Alaskans were unemployed, compared to 7.9 percent last year and 7.5 percent in June. The seasonally adjusted unemployment rates nationwide is 9.1 percent, compared to 9.5 percent last July. The state's economist Neal Fried writes that this year represents an all time high of employment with 355,100 Alaskans working. Employment in Alaska has grown every year since 1988 with the only exception of the tail end of the national recession in 2009.

of a new Arctic region oil field by chasing a Russian geological team from a proposed drilling site, the Russian Interfax news agency reported last week. The incident happened in Russia's far northern Yamalo-Nenetsk autonomous region as the three scientists were constructing a field camp.

The survey team was forced to retreat five kilometres to a working drill rig to evade the animal, abandoning their tent camp and its contents in the process, Interfax reported. The camp's abandonment and the bear's probable continued presence nearby had brought development plans in the area to almost a full halt, officials with the company

Alaska this week

National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administrator Dr. Jane Lubchenco is in Alaska this week for a series of meetings with Alaskans on the future of oil and gas development in Cook Inlet, fisheries and other issues. U.S. Senator Mark Begich and Lubchenco will host a series of meetings including an aviation weather roundtable on oil and gas development. "As we move forward on oil and gas development in Cook Inlet, this will be an excellent opportunity for Dr. Lubchenco to talk with Alaskans about ways to streamline permitting, issues surrounding the beluga whale, fisheries. and essentially the overall importance of NOAA's relationship with LAND, LOTS OF LAND—The Nome Common Council has approved a purchase of two lots on the Snake River from Alaska Gold Co. for $85,000 for port expansion. City administration is also eyeing land shown with the two Quonsets that belongs to Jim Gribben, but that industrial land currently bears a price tag of $650,000.

those that frequent our businesses to see what they wanted as part of their socializing experience," Sackett's letter said. Sackett said the local liquor industry was concerned for their employees who would have no place to go to smoke, concerned for patrons who would have to struggle in winter months to smoke 20 feet from somewhere and for the additional smoking debris that would undoubtedly appear to be frozen in eight months of the year.

Michels said the city clerk had provided Sackett the information and forms to get signatures to put the question on the ballot.

Asked if he had what he needed to enforce the smoking law, NPD Chief John Papasodora responded, "The ordinance will enforce it."

Nome Community Center submitted a letter to the Council packet thanking the panel for passing the ordinance.

"This decision will help to protect the health of all workers and patrons of Nome businesses from the dangers of second-hand smoke, which include lung cancer, emphysema, heart disease, birth defects ..." said the letter. NCC, through a grant program, plans to canvas businesses to see how they can help with needs demanded by the smoking law. They have purchased ash cans to reduce litter along high-traffic areas of town and have purchased signs to distribute to local businesses to help customers know where smoking is and is not permitted.

In other business, the Council:

- Passed into second reading an ordinance authorizing the sale of the ambulance garage located on Bering Street across from the old cop shop and fire department headquarters. The building and lot would go for the highest responsible and responsive bid above the reserve of $144,800, the current appraised value. If the ordinance is adopted at the Sept. 12 Council meeting, the bid deadline will be Oct. 17.
- Adopted an ordinance permitting the City to buy two lots at Port of Nome from the Alaska Gold Co. for $85,000 with funds coming from the Port of Nome's approved FY2012 spending plan. The land will be used for port expansion and enlarged access to the Snake River. The City also has eyes on land at the port owned by Jim Gribben, who has listed that holding next to the Alaska Gold property for over $600,000.
  - Adopted an ordinance amending an existing law to increase the membership of the Nome Port Commission from five to seven members. Councilman Stan Andersen tried to tweak the revised ordinance to say that the mayor and council members would be ex officio members of the commission but would not have a vote. Councilman Jim West Jr. is a member of the Port Commission. That amendment to the amendment did not fly, after Councilwoman Mary Knodel noted that the part that Andersen wanted to change had not been advertised according to City law. The Council later in the meeting approved Michels' reappointment of Charlie Weiss to the planning Commission and the new appointment of Larry W. Pederson to the Planning Commission. Pedersen, a member of Alaska Miners Assn., is a land and resource manager for Bering Straits Native Corporation. He has been a resident of Nome for 35 years.

DELIVERING THE DATA—Nome Police Chief John Papasodora delivers the hard facts to Nome Common Council on getting drunks off Front Street and downtown: There is no state law against being drunk in public. Incapacitated persons must, by law, be picked up and taken for a medical screening, followed by release to a third party's supervision or, in most cases, to the jail on Center Creek Road for a 12-hour hold, and then be released to return to the party unless other charges apply, like violating probation. Nome has no treatment center to receive such cases.

Chief: Higher pay, subsidized housing could help keep police officers

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome Police Department is having difficulty recruiting and keeping officers who, once they arrive in Nome, face the economic hardships that face many in Nome: high cost of housing, heat and food, and low pay. Add burnout on the job and lack of opportunity to advance, as well as greener grass in police departments elsewhere that tend to take police personnel back out of Nome.

The chief delivered a "white paper" on the topic Aug. 19 at a Nome Common Council public work session that included a discussion of police personnel retention.

The force is doing more work with fewer resources than several years ago, according to NPD Chief John Papasodora.

The number of persons who qualify and want to enter law enforcement is a small percentage of the population, Papasodora told the Council panel.

"Attracting these candidates to live and work in western Alaska is a significant challenge," he said. "The cost of living is high; the pay is too low. These guys are scraping by."

To be certified by the Alaska Police Standards Council and be employable, a candidate must meet minimum qualifications: age 21, high school education, no serious criminal violations, no domestic violence convictions, of good moral character and no marijuana use within a year; no other illicit drug use within 10 years. Next comes a life-examining polygraph test, a psychological evaluation, a full medical exam and an intense background investigation.

In police work, three distinct periods of burnout affect almost every police officer at two years, five years and 10 years. In small departments, pasodora. The City has an ordinance against open containers, but according to a memo to the police force from NPD Sgt. Byron Redburn, the State of Alaska does not represent the City in such violations. Police are the prosecutors and must take evidence, photos and notes to court. This would be true with a law on varancy.

Once you criminalize something, it becomes a financial liability, Papasodora said.

State law says that inebriates cannot be treated as a different class.

"Whatever we do has to be constitutional. Whatever we do has to be defensible legally," Papasodora said.

Police cannot take a bottle, unless it is an open container. The public calling in open containers would help, he said.

The City does have peripheral laws affecting drunken behavior to work with: Criminal Trespass II—remaining on premises after a person with authority over the place have asked one to leave; Open Container/Public Consumption—alcohol is seized for evidence and the charge requires mandatory court appearance with a maximum fine of $500; Drunk on Premises—violator is arrested and incarcerated with a misdemeanor offense. If a licensee or employee (of a bar, for example)

DOT abandons idea to relocate Snake River for airport

By Diana Haecker

The Department of Transportation and Public Facilities decided to abandon the idea of relocating a portion of the Snake River as was planned for the improvement of the main runway at the Nome airport. DOT spokeswoman Meadow Bailey said that the decision was made in July because the costs were too high. She said in an email to The Nome Nugget that the estimates for relocating the Snake River, constructing the safety area and acquiring the right-of-way came out to be approximately $40 million.

Since the runway at present has no safety area beyond the existing 300 feet, the DOT&PF proposed to construct a 1,000-foot runway safety area on each end of the runway and a 500-foot wide runway safety area along the entire paved runway.

Per FAA design standards, a runway servicing commercial jet traffic should include a safety area that is 500 feet wide and extends 1,000 feet beyond each runway end. The west end of the existing runway borders the Snake River and it was proposed to re-route the river channel to the south from river mile 2 to river mile

After months of study and two public meetings in fall 2009 and summer 2010, the DOT posted a note on the project's website that said that "after further studies, the proposed relocation of the Snake River has been found impracticable because of the estimated construction cost."

The DOT&PF is currently looking at other options for RSA improvement for Runway 10 that will fit within the available funding. Bailey said that there is no preferred alternative yet, but that they are evaluating an engineered materials arrestor system, also called EMAS. The arrestor systems are intended to stop aircraft that have overshot a runway when there is insufficient space for a standard runway safety area. The EMAS is used at New York City's John F. Kennedy International Airport and in Alaska at the Cordova Airport.

If this ends up to be the alternative that the DOT would prefer, the runway would be extended 190 feet instead of 1,000 feet.

Bailey said that the DOT needs to complete the draft environmental assessment document, which will be put out for public comments. The next public meeting is planned for October.

• Public drunkenness

allows the person to remain or serves a drunken person, the vendor can be charged with Sale to Drunken Persons

Nome's law-abiding citizens, merchants, Chamber of Commerce, law enforcement and hospital staff are wringing their hands in frustration with the public nuisance of drunkenness and associated out-of-control behavior vexing the sights of tourists, children and passersby, along with the dollars-and-cents cost of hauling in drunks, many as repeat offenders, to the hospital and the jail, where drunks need to be restrained and may defecate, urinate, spit, and assault responders. Caring for drunks diverts the police from other law enforcement, the greater part of which has an alcohol factor, according to Papasodora.

Councilman Jim West Jr., a volunteer for Nome Volunteer Ambulance, estimated that out of about 650 ambulance calls per year, roughly 85-90 percent have a relation to alcohol consumption. Many of the calls come to volunteers' phones after bar closing and pull them out of bed for "drunk down."

What the police are doing is what they legally have to do, Papasodora told the Council. They had a report from him to back up his presentation. Once police know a person is impaired, they have to pick him up for safety reasons as a potential harm to himself or others, according to law. Having been picked up, the person must go to the hospital emergency room for medical screening and released to the safety of third-party custody. Problem is, Papasodora told the Council, many of those picked up for Title 47 protective custody contact have no relatives in town or do not have relatives willing to take responsibility, thus the drunks remain at the hospital, monitored, to "sleep it off" or go to absorb resources at Anvil Mountain Correc-

Alaska state law is unclear on what "drunken" means. Again, according to Papasodora's report, there is no state law against public drunkenness. Yet, the state Supreme Court ruled in 1987 that the City of Anchorage had a responsibility to take persons incapacitated by alcohol in a public place into protective custody. The ruling stems from an incident in 1980 when Thomas Busby was walking about two feet into the traffic lane on East Fifth Avenue in Anchorage. A police officer spotted Busby, stopped him, moved him to the side of the road, talked with him and determined that he was intoxicated. The officer ran a warrant check on Busby, but did not place him in custody. Shortly after the officer drove off, a car struck Busby who suffered injuries. Busby alleged in a trial court that Anchorage was negligent and reckless in not taking him into protective custody. The trial court disagreed, but the higher court said the City of Anchorage did have a responsibility to take people incapacitated by alcohol into protective Meantime, the police force follows policies established a year ago in a tri-agency meeting among representatives of Norton Sound Health Corp., NPD, and AMCC. These procedures include keeping a supply of citizen's arrest forms on hand in the hospital emergency room when individuals slap, punch, kick, bite or otherwise injure hospital personnel.

Mitch Erickson of Nome Chamber of Commerce suggested that Nome put a law making public drunkenness illegal at the top of the City's priority list. Nome resident Sue Steinacher wants a community task force drawn together to confront the falling-down-drunk -in public issue. "Maybe we could come up with some creative solutions," she said. Another member of the public recommended restricting habitual public drunks to buying only beer to slow them down. Another pointed out that Nome could become a legal medical marijuana distribution center that would temper behavior. The chief did not go there.

Would having a second Community Service Officer help? Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked. "Yes," said the chief.

The police chief stressed that what he wants for now is a clear-cut law to enforce and a no -sell list. Limiting hours of sales was not the answer, he said. Unless one has the mechanics to change the culture, whether it comes from a package store or bars until 3 a.m., it is the same.

The Council expects an additional report and session with Papasodora in mid-September.

Keep police officers

such as Nome's, job rotation and cross training to alleviate burnout are not readily available, as resources do not exist to support such solutions, according to Papasodora. Most officers make it through the two-year phase, but the critical burnout phase is at five years when the employee will most likely seek other jobs. Burnout at about 10 years is when posttraumatic stress syndrome may affect the officer's view of life and the job. Papasodora said that maintaining full staffing of Nome's department could allow some strategies to reduce burnout-job rotation, reassignment, promotional opportunities and career development.

However, outside influences lead to loss of personnel, such as local economic issues and wages. The starting wage for Police Officer I candidates in Nome effective the beginning of the year is $24.55 per hour, an average of $3,928 for a 160hour work month, and $47,136 per year. This is 35 percent below the median household income for the community, according to Papasodora. After average taxes, the net is $2,749 per month. Even a Police Officer II at the end of the scale would gross $68,827 per year, too low to qualify for the average-priced home at $209,558. Home ownership is an important tie to the community that encourages permanence.

By comparison, according to Papasodora, a similar sized city such as Soldotna starts police officers at $29.13, almost $5 an hour higher, and $55,929.60 annually. Consumer costs are comparable to Anchorage.

High prices for groceries, rent and fuel as well as the availability of quality and affordable housing are a detriment to recruitment and retention of police personnel.

"The wage scales for Police Officer I and II are insufficient to provide economic incentive for long-term employment with City of Nome, Papasodora said.

Less than 10 percent of applicants who apply for police work actually make it to the final job offer. Most small agencies lack the incentives to recruit the 10 qualified applicants it would take to hire one or two officers, Papasodora said.

"As trained personnel leave the agency, it can take two months to find a replacement and an additional eight months of training to put a qualified officer on the streets" Papasodora said. "Therefore, a vacancy today is actually a vacancy for up to 10 months."

The department has instituted some strategies to keep police officers, but more incentives need to be developed, the chief said. So far, new practices are underway that include:

Reestablishing the avenues of upward mobility with re-establishing the lieutenant position.

Succession planning—training officers to assume roles of greater responsibility in the organization as well as building depth of experience so that burnout is reduced by job enrichment.

To foster team building and a squad, or team, "esprit de corps" mentality, the department implemented a serious firearms training program and went into team scheduling.

If the City is serious about the goal to create and maintain a highly skilled and competent police department, then additional strategies are required, according to Papasodora:

Remove the police department from general collective bargaining unit and treat police services as a sub-chapter of the main agreement, recognizing that police services are unlike any other sector in the City in terms of operation and function. Such a separation would allow the City to separately address retention within the police department.

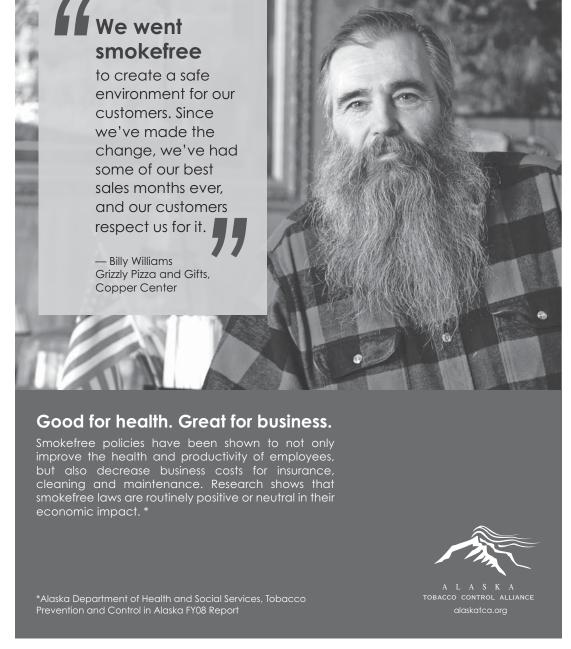

Revise position classifications to include Police Officer I, II and III in order to provide more advancement and upward mobility.

Ease costs for new officers entering the community by providing subsidized housing at a reasonable cost, or establish subsidized home purchases with the City acting as lender.

Provide an effective employee evaluation process to provide feedback on performance.

A housing subsidy could be part of the union negotiation, Councilman Stan Andersen commented.

The Council has planned a work session with Papasodora to address police issues.

FAST RUNNER—A lone musk ox bull is galloping across Sepalla Drive after the Nome police chief drove him out of the Belmont Point neighborhood and back into a more natural setting on Sunday evening.

Musk oxen move into Nome

NPD busy hazing musk oxen out of neighborhoods, ADF&G opens limited hunt

By Diana Haecker

A Belmont Point resident tended to his barbeque and flipped a burger on his porch oblivious to the fact that a large shaggy, brown silver-backed creature casually walked behind his house. The scene played out on Sunday night when a lone musk ox bull hung out around the Prospect Apartments on Prospect Lane at Belmont Point. Residents of the apartments said he had been hanging out there all day, eating on the scarce greens and resting. By evening, the police were trying to get the bull out of the neighborhood, a difficult task that was eventually accomplished with a long stick and human stubbornness surpassing that of the beast.

At first, John Handeland tried to persuade the animal to leave with noise. Handeland's weapon of choice was the Lions' Club Nome River raft race starter cannon. The cannon boomed twice while the musk ox lingered on a hillside between Larry's Auto and houses on the west side of McLain Lane. The noise had some effect and got the musk ox moving, but the animal was in a tight spot that didn't allow for escape. Along the road, police officers secured the area of curious onlookers and stood with flashing lights on Seppala Drive to slow down traffic. Police Chief John Papasodora then took matters into his hands, approached the bull from behind and prodded the animal with a 30-foot pole. After a couple of whacks with the pole, the musk ox moved along, made it down the hill to Seppala Drive, galloped across the street and escaped into the cemetery area. But around midnight, the musk ox returned and chief Papasodora had to climb out of bed again to haze the animal on his four-wheeler out of the Belmont area again and further up to the cemetery area.

No persons and no dogs were hurt in the incident. This is not the first time that NPD were called to escort musk ox out of populated areas. Some incidents didn't end as peaceful. In the past two months, one dog was killed by a musk ox in Icy View and just a few weeks ago, a musk ox attacked and injured two other dogs in the area. And with every summer, musk oxen seem to move closer to human settlements.

While the lone bull was hanging out in the Belmont neighborhood on Sunday, a herd of 14 musk oxen milled around across the Snake River at the small harbor barge ramp and in between cargo containers. The herd consisted of cows, calves and a bull. At times they were just inches away from the Port Road and remained calm and unfazed as cars, trucks and even a couple of bicycles went by. This may be unusual in most places, but musk oxen seeking out urban areas to hang out seem to be an increasing trend in Nome.

Tony Gorn, area biologist for Alaska Department of Fish and Game, said that for the last five years he has spent more time working on musk oxen than on anything else. He added it hasn't been that long ago since musk oxen were a rare sight in the close Nome vicinity. "It's pretty noteworthy that in 2001, we only had a group or two but not that many animals this close to town," Gorn said. They were out there, near the Flambeau River, Army Peak, Newton Peak and some at the Snake River. Gorn went on explaining that the musk ox population in unit 22C grew rapidly in the past decade. "In just a two-year period the population and closes March 15.

Alaska State Wildlife Trooper Brian Miller is one of the first responders dealing with the increasing calls when musk ox tangle with dogs or get too close for comfort. He said that the Nome Police Department reless they have to. But they don't appear to be lazy either. A herd that was in one place for days on end, suddenly disappears and is nowhere to be seen. They appear as fast as they vanish and people wake up to find 14 musk oxen standing in their gardens, GUESS WHO'S IN MY BACKYARD?—Belmont Point resident Peter Irrigoo is on the phone with his sister as the musk ox bull that has been hanging out in the neighborhood all day was convinced to move on.

grew from 220 to 445," Gorn said. This changed the distribution of the musk ox groups and they moved closer and closer to Nome.

Nome proper seems to be a good place to be a musk ox. People see them through their viewfinders instead of cross hairs. Hunting the musk oxen around town was not allowed and the animals learned that people are not dangerous. Hunting was allowed in 22c, some years there were even 28 permits handed out, but the area from the east bank of the Penny to the west bank of the Flambeau rivers was closed for harvest.

Gorn said that while it seems like there are a lot of musk oxen in the area, they are just concentrated in Nome. On the entire Seward Peninsula, the latest count was 2,616 animals. Later this year, ADF&G will perform another musk ox count on the Seward Peninsula.

Despite the fact that they seem to be everywhere locally, Gorn said there are indications that the greater Seward Peninsula population may decline. "We do see a rapid decline in bull to cow ratio," said Gorn. In only five years, the bull to cow ratio plummeted from 70 bulls per 100 cows, to 20 bulls per 100 cows. "We learned that our harvest rates were higher than was sustainable," Gorn said.

He explained that hunters instead of taking the younger, tender bulls, ended up killing the biggest bull of the herd. "We don't encourage that," he said. With the biggest and strongest specimen of the gene pool removed, the bull to cow ratio has crashed. In direct response to that and the mounting conflict with humans claiming their space, ADF&G opened a hunt in an area that was previously closed to musk ox harvest.

The area now open to hunt is between the east bank of Penny River and the west bank of the Flambeau River, along Safety Sound to Safety Bridge, the Snake River drainage and the Nome River drainage. Gorn already gave out eight permits for musk ox cows, not bulls. Hunting within the city limits is prohibited, and the weapons are restricted to shotguns with slugs or bow and arrow. The hunt opens on January 1 sponds to calls of musk ox within city limits. "But if they are not available, troopers and the wildlife trooper certainly try to respond," Miller said. In his observation, so far, it has been mostly a lone bachelor bull – not the herd's main bull- who gets into trouble. In talks with Tony Gorn, he suggested to open a hunt on the animals that were so far taboo for hunting and for wildlife viewing purposes only. "My hope with that the hend to stay away from people," Miller said.

While the book on musk oxen behavior yet has to be written, the local experts found out several things.

Tony Gorn believes that spraying a musk ox with a water hose is an effective way to get them moving. Wildlife trooper Miller said while percussion-like sounds of banging pots or pans don't seem to be effective and may even antagonize the bulls, high pitched sounds like air horns send the musk ox running. UAF Northwest Campus biology professor and musk ox researcher Claudia Ihl has followed a herd of musk oxen near Cape Krusenstern for months and has observed that the animals don't like physical contact – not even among their own - and especially loathe being touched on the rear end. This was confirmed by chief Papasodora's success to move the musk ox by whacking him across the rear end with the pole.

The only exception, Ihl notes, is when a bull pursues a willing female. As most attacks against dogs happen during summer, Ihl also offers an explanation that the attacks mostly involve lone bulls. As the August/September rutting season nears, the main bulls in the herd start driving away bachelor bulls of breeding age. "The main bull will not tolerate another bull in his herd at that time," Ihl said. The bulls' testosterone levels rise and while driven away from their herd, the bachelors may form a group or just wander around by themselves. "The young bulls are very mobile and are searching for opportunities somewhere else," said Ihl.

Ihl said that at other times, the animals are geared to conserve their energy and don't move around unmunching on everything, including the rhubarb.

Gorn said that there is a common misperception that musk oxen don't move around very much. ADF&G radio-collared several cows and Gorn reported that one cow from Nome walked to Teller within a day and another cow traveled from Council to the lava beds at the headwaters of the Kuzitrin and back within a couple of months.

Not only do musk oxen get habituated to people, it seems the same holds true the other way around. Gorn finds it amazing that people didn't get hurt yet. "The musk oxen have been amazingly patient with people," Gorn said. He said people get too close to them, try to take photos close-up with their cell phones and just don't give them enough room. "You need to treat them like you would treat a moose cow with a freshly dropped calf," said Gorn. 'Treat them with respect. Give them room," he said. "The number one thing with all wild animals is to give them space." Gorn said that he gets calls from residents that cover the spectrum from, "We're so lucky to live in a wild place like Nome where musk ox roam," to "They're a nuisance, eradicate them already."

As for musk ox attacking dogs, Gorn said that it is legal to kill a musk ox in defense of life and property, but he said that ADF&G needs to be notified, the animal needs to be field dressed and the meat taken care of

At Belmont Point, Peter Irrigoo and his mother Alice didn't seem to be too aggravated about a musk ox in their yard. They watched as the bull slowly walked underneath their window and Peter gave an up-to-the minute account to his sister on the phone. The Irrigoos were joking that the police chased away their pet, but then Alice Irrigoo added that she was a little bit worried that the musk ox may ram the house.

Another resident at the Prospect apartments said the bull just ate and rested, and didn't bother her either. However, chief Papasodora didn't want to run the risk of having kids in the area for the first day of school when the musk ox is hanging around.

Chum harvest tops 236,000 fish in Kotzebue

The commercial harvest of chum salmon in the Kotzebue district reached a season total of 236,000 fish caught by 87 permit holders last week, reports Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game.

Menard said 60,000 chums (the best catch of the season) took place last week when the main runway at the Kotzebue airport was open. The runway often has been closed for construction this summer. The commercial catch forecast for Kotzebue of 230,000 to 260,000 chum salmon was reached, he noted.

"More runway closures are scheduled for the rest of the month, but with the late season surge of chum salmon, it's possible to beat last year's harvest of 270,000 chum salmon," Menard said. "The number of permit holders fishing this late in August is more than double the number in the past decade, and is likely due to the evening fishing hours for the first time since the 1990s."

Norton Sound district

The following information is based on Menard's most recent fisheries update. The total commercial salmon harvest through Aug. 19 in Norton Sound was 137 kings, 300 sockeyes, 108,632 chums, 7,119 pinks and 45,269 silvers. The silver run is average in southern Norton Sound, but below average in the northern portion of the district.

The cumulative commercial silver salmon catch by each Norton Sound subdistrict through Aug. 19 was: Unalakleet, 20,534; Shaktoolik, 14,022; Norton Bay, 4,509; Elim, 5,345; and Golovin, 859. No commercial fishing is expected in the Golovin subdistrict because the silver escapement has dropped off and projections show the escapement may fall short of the goal.

Nome subdistrict

The subsistence set gillnet schedule for silver salmon in the last half of August is in effect in the Nome subdistrict. The marine waters are open seven days a week. The fresh water subsistence area set gillnet schedule is from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday.

until 6 p.m. Saturday.

The silver run to Nome subdistrict rivers should peak this week. If the run does not improve this week, subsistence restrictions may be required next week.

Port Clarence district

Chum salmon catch limits on the Pilgrim River have been waived. Only 11 silvers salmon were counted at the Pilgrim River weir through Aug. 19. The silver count is trailing all years in the project's nine-year history.

The Dock Walk

Nome Harbor master Joy Baker reports what has been going on in the past week at the docks in Nome's port and small harbor.

After what seemed weeks of wet and rainy weather, it's been beautiful this past week. Halibut fishing is in full swing and fishermen could go out and chase fish all week long. Gold dredgers were able to go out to work and enjoy being out there. A herd of musk oxen kept showing up very early in the morning at the port, grazing on the bank and as soon as traffic starts in the morning, they move along up the hill towards the tundra on West Beach.

It was a busy week at the harbor. On Monday a mainline barge brought cargo into Nome and a landing craft came in to get cargo for Kotzebue.

The Alaska Fish and Game vessel Pandalus was in the harbor on Tuesday, Wednesday and left on Thursday. On Wednesday, a gravel barge came to pick up gravel for Alakanuk and a research vessel called The Mystery Bay doing research for NOAA arrived on Wednesday and left the next day.

On Thursday and Friday, landing crafts came in from Gambell, bringing back equipment from the Tumet road project there. Also there were more landing craft taking cargo to Little Diomede. On Saturday a gravel barge took material to Kotzebue and on Sunday another demobilization landing craft came in from Gambell, taking on a load of gravel to Alakanuk.

On Monday Northland came in and was offloading cargo on the outer cell at the port. A landing craft left for Northeast Cape on St. Lawrence Island to pick up more "dirty" dirt to be hauled off. The dirty dirt is contaminated soil from the formerly used defense site. Bagged piles of the dirt were staged at the port and then loaded on the barge bound to Seattle.

The Korean icebreaker Araon also showed up for a couple days, anchored offshore.

Local emergency planner leaves Nome

By Diana Haecker

Last week's local emergency planning commission meeting set a whole new standard in culinary treats served at such occasions as the city's emergency services administrators Mimi Farley and Seiji Heck set the buffet consisting of freshly caught, baked silvers served with rice and green salad. The occasion marked the last meeting that disaster planner Seiji Heck is on the job as he is leaving Nome to pursue a paramedic degree in Fairbanks for the next two years. Heck promised he'd bring the acquired knowledge back to Nome.

In other business, the commission set the date for the tri-annual emergency exercise for October 26. The exercise will involve simulating a large aircraft incident.

Mimi Farley announced that the city's Emergency Operations Plan has been approved by the State of Alaska Department of Homeland Security and Emergency Services. The plan now needs to go to Nome Common Council to be adopted.

The body discussed that more National Incident Management System training is needed for first responders as well as upper level city management. Tom Vaden offered to teach some classes. Other class levels are offered online. According to FEMA, the National Integration Center recommends that elected officials who will be interacting with multiple jurisdictions and agencies during an incident should complete Incident Command 700, and Introduction to Incident Command and ICS-100. The classes aim to provide a basic understanding of the National Incident Management System and the Incident Command System, to understand reporting structures, common terminology etc.

Under old business, the body discussed Tier II reporting. Under Tier II reporting, businesses report substances that are hazardous chemicals, materials and waste. LEPC chair Tom Vaden said that the commission has not received Tier 2 reports from NovaGold Resources Inc., the owner of Rock Creek Mine. While the company's representative in Nome John Odden was not present at the meeting, fire chief Matt Johnson said that he received a tour and saw that at the company's staging area at Satellite Field there is still ammonium nitrate stored. Johnson said it is kept in containers that are parked door-to-door.

Johnson said that the company is under the impression that they don't need Tier II reporting as the mine is regulated under the Mine Safety and Health Administration, MSHA. The cyanide components that were stored at the mine site, have been transported out of Nome. Fire chief Johnson said that the company gave the fire department a courtesy call when the substance was trucked out and put on the Many are good to eat but sculpins are not important commercially. This antlered sculpin from Norton Sound has spined antler-like projections on its head and uses them for defense against trouble. Antlered sculpin can be found from Barrow to Southeast as well as on the Russian side of the Bering Sea as far south as the Aleutians.

Teacher shuffling at the elementary school

Additional Kindergarten teacher request

The meeting began with several parents of incoming kindergarteners expressing concerns about this year's class size. As it stood, the approximate 70 kindergarteners were to be taught by three teachers, resulting in class sizes of about 23 students each. The parents urged that a fourth teacher be added. One parent offered the potential solution of taking a currently assigned 4th grade teacher and reassigning them to kindergarten since the 4th grade classes currently maintained lower teacher/student ratios. A parent of two 4th graders then addressed the board and respectfully asked that they consider the issue of large kindergarten classes but leave the 4th grade teachers in place. Dave Keller, principal of Nome Elementary School, and a parent of an incoming kindergartener himself, later explained that he would verify incoming numbers as much as possible and make a decision by Friday, August 19.

It was announced on Friday that Jeff Collins, formerly assigned to 4th grade, would instead teach kindergarten this year. In an email to The Nome Nugget Keller added, "We are also concerned about and are carefully watching our 4th grade class size."

JROTC program clarifications

Master Sergeant Knowlton addressed the board in an effort to clear up confusion generated from a previous school board meeting where the JROTC Program was discussed. "Right now, both of the instructors that we have on board, myself and Sergeant First Class Doll, are currently certified by Cadet Command," clarified Knowlton. He continued, "...there is confusion as far as our status as being on probation with Cadet Command. We were on probation...2009-2010 school year, we were on probation with Cadet Command. And that probation was not due to instructor certification. It was due to the fact that we had only one instructor of the two that are required. Sergeant Doll coming on board last year took us out of that probationary status." Knowlton also noted that on March 27, 2012 Nome's JROTC program will have a formal inspection and is hopeful they will advance up to an Honor Unit with Distinction ranking.

Athletic Director position

Superintendent Michael Brawner submitted a six page, detailed Activity Director research document, as well as a ten page calendar estimating AD time commitments. Board Member Barb Nickels requested the AD position be added to the agenda. Board Chair Gloria Karmun instructed it could only be added as an action item by one of the naysayers, referring to board members Barb Amarok or Marie Tozier, and suggested it could be discussed during Board Members Open Discussion instead.

Brawner did briefly summarize the document during open discussion, however, it was stifled at points due to the absence of Amarok, in the interest she hear the information at the work session on August 23 dedicated to the topic.

Board Member Betsy Brennan expressed frustration at the time and energy that this issue had consumed while academic issues suffered. Nickels expressed similar sentiments citing that this issue had endured six weeks, three meetings, a special meeting and a work session while the specific concerns of the position were still unclear to her. Tozier added later, "For me, it's obvious that this position has caused problems in the past and I wanted to see it laid out." Tozier was referring to the detailed information from Brawner that seemed to be what she needed to move forward to a conclusion at the August 23 work session.

Brawner informed the board that without objection, he would assign the AD duties to a two-period per school day temporary position and the after school AD activities would be voluntary. He explained that the temporary position would also potentially involve the district paying a stipend of $150 to $250 for weekend events until the board reached a decision on the AD contract.

NBHS mandatory after school tutorials

Steve Gast, Nome Beltz Jr/Sr High principal, reported a successful summer school of 23 students who either started or recovered credits. He also informed the board of mandatory after school tutorials this year. Any student who has a grade below 60 percent at anytime will be required to attend until the grade moves above 60 percent. The tutorials will also be available for all students on a voluntary basis if they are looking for additional help in any course.

Elementary school updates

Dave Keller, Nome Elementary principal, informed the board of two recent vacancies. Kelly Thrun resigned as a 5/6 team teacher to accept a teaching position in the North Star Borough School District and Janet Balice, per her request, returned to the preschool program with Kawerak Headstart.

Important Elementary dates announced:

September 16 Back to School Night -6:00 to 7:30 p.m. September 27 Hearing Screening (will be coordinated with AĈSA and Beltz Jr/Sr High also)

October 5 Vision Screening (will be coordinated with ACSA and Beltz Jr/Sr High also)

State of Alaska: PERS Salary Floor

Michael Brawner, superintendent of Nome Public Schools, alerted the board that NPS currently owed the State of Alaska roughly $51,000 for FY2009 and FY2010 PERS salary floor shortfalls. He explained that due to unique circumstances including a student population loss of 79 students between the school years of 2007 and 2009, thereby reducing some classified staff, NPS had "come short of their salary floor," which was determined in FY2008. Brawner is drafting a letter to the State explaining Nome's specific circumstances and noted that Alaska Association of School Business Officials (ALASBO) was working on a position paper, as well, to submit to the legislature asking for reconsideration since it affects fifteen other school districts.

NPS adds in-service day

Hearing no objection from the board, Brawner also announced that September 19 would be changed to an in-service day (no school for students) to accommodate a Reading Mastery training. NPS had one day of in-service available and all other scheduled in-service days will remain.

NPS Administrative Salary Schedule

In January, the Nome School Board tabled a salary schedule for NPS certified directors, coordinators and principals which incorporated a 3 percent increase. The FY 2011-12 budget did include this increase and the schedule was brought before the board again as an action item at this regular meeting. Brennan, Nickels and Karmun voted in favor, Tozier opposed it.

The Nome Board of Education meets again on September 13 at 5:30 p.m. in regular session at the NES Library.

DESCRÎBING RESEARCH—Brett Sandercock (second from right) answers questions from members of a Nome birding class in late May about a four-year study of western and semipalmated sandpipers at a research site in the Safety Sound area. Sandercock is an associate professor of wildlife ecology at Kansas State University and co-investigator for the project. Standing next to him is Erika Escajeda, a recent graduate of University of California Berkeley who participated in the research. If you were in the Safety Sound area in June or July, you probably saw several young adults toting small green nest traps across the tundra and wondered who they are, what they're doing.

They are students from American and Canadian universities who recently completed the second year of field work in a four-year study focusing on western and semipalmated sandpipers at a research site on land owned by Sitnasuak Native Corp. The study looks for changes in the population structure (demography) of the breeding sandpipers in relation to environmental change.

Co-investigators for the project are Brett Sandercock, associate professor of Wildlife Ecology at Kansas State University, and David (Dov) Lank, research associate and adjunct professor at Simon Fraser University. Findings of the study will be compared with demographic data on the same species gathered at the site in the mid to late 1990s by Sandercock as part of his PhD study at SFU and by other graduate students. Lank served on Sandercock's doctoral thesis committee at that time.

The current field study at Safety Sound is part of a much larger network of sites for research on migratory shorebirds across arctic sites in Alaska and Canada. The Arctic Shorebird Demographics Network was formed in 2009 to examine the reproductive biology, survival and environmental factors limiting population numbers of arctic-breeding shorebirds. Fifteen organizational partners are working together to conduct demographic field research at 10 sites from Nome in the west to sites in northern Manitoba, Canada in the east.

"I thank Sitnasuak for their cooperation, and we are very grateful to have the opportunity to work on their lands," Sandercock told The Nome Nugget in an interview June 4 at a camp near the research site. He worked on the study plot with the five-student research crew for three weeks starting in mid-May. Lank had arrived that day for a brief stay. He and Sandercock dined with the students at a rough-hewn table in front of three Weatherport tents that shelter food and supplies and look like miniature Quonset huts. Nearby stood a cluster of tents.

• Sandpiper research or semipalmated sandpipers, Kwon reports. "We were most struck by their fast, synchronized reproduction," she added. "Our first found sandpiper nest hatched on June 14, and the last nest hatched around July If every nest successfully produces four chicks, then there would have been 608 chicks hatched in three weeks.

"We use the data gathered to estimate populations, sensitivity to climate change, and population viability, so the larger the sample size analyzed for avian malaria and are used to identify a bird's sex, Kwon explained. She said it is easy to distinguish a male from a female western sandpiper by the length of the female's beak, but the sex of the semipalmated sandpiper is difficult to identify.

Mating strategies vary

Western and semipalmated sandpipers are socially monogamousone male pairs with one female—and both sexes incubate the eggs. Males the nest.' Sandercock said red-necked phalaropes do not return to the same nest site they used the previous year, and the female leaves the nest as soon as she completes laying her eggs (usually four). "She goes to get a second mate," he said. The male incubates the eggs.

and five percent of chicks banded at Kwon described the research English conducted at nests of red-necked phalaropes this year. "The male needs to incubate the whole time, but he has to forage for food to survive,' she noted. "Willow wonders if that's why the egg size is smaller. The energy expenditure depends on the egg mass. Willow measured the eggs and monitored the incubation periods. She kept a temperature log on each phalarope. She placed a small probe—a temperature logger—on the bottom of each nest right at the

"The logger is sensitive, so as the phalarope leaves the nest the temperature drops, and it rises again when he returns," Kwon explained. "Willow collected the probes from every nest and downloaded the data. She was able to log the time and temperature as each male incubated, foraged, incubated, so she can tell how much effort each male made."

Kwon said rainstorms on two days in July flooded several of the phalarope nests but none of the sandpiper nests. "Willow and Melanie were bummed," she noted.

New tracking technology

Western sandpipers banded at Safety Sound may spend the winter at sites from northern Mexico to Ecuador. Until recently, researchers have depended on infrequent information-sightings reports of the banded birds—to learn where some of them spend the winter. Sandercock said if the birds winter further south than North America, they may skip the first breeding season and stay at their winter quarters. "We know about delayed breeding because of the research network Dov directs," he explained. "Arctic breeding semipalmated sandpipers winter in northern South America, particularly Suriname, Guyana, and French Guiana.'

Sandercock said a new device called a geolocator can be used to track the entire migration route of an individual sandpiper from Safety Sound to its winter quarters and back to its nest site. The battery-powered devices record light and store data on sunrise and sunset times, which vary with latitude and longitude. They are small and light enough for sandpipers to carry.

"A geolocator weighing 0.8 grams is attached to a leg band," Sander-cock explained. "Both species of sandpipers weigh about 25 grams (less than an ounce). When they migrate they weigh 35 to 40 grams.' When a bird with a geolocator returns to its nesting site, researchers will livetrap it, remove the geolocator and download its data, he added.

Kwon said she shrank PVC tubes to a size appropriate for sandpipers and placed them on the legs of 14 birds (9 semipalmated sandpipers and 5 western sandpipers) with geolocators attached to each of them. "If you do not know where they spend the winter, you don't know what is affecting their demography and viability," she noted.

Sandercock said female sandpipers leave the breeding grounds first, followed by males and then juveniles. Juveniles migrate about three weeks after they hatch. They were flocking in preparation for migration in late July. Weather conditions were rainy and windy for much of July. Kwon wonders whether the birds were able to forage for food in such weather. She said strong winds limited the use of mist-nets to capture and band juveniles to three times this Stable isotope analysis of feathers is another technique for tracking migrating birds. Feather samples were collected from birds on the study plot, including the birds carrying geolocators. Scientists can figure out where a bird grew a feather by looking at the isotopes of carbon and nitrogen within each feather, which are a signature of the location where the birds spent the winter and grew their feathers.

What's for dinner?

"Western and semipalmated sandpipers forage on insect larvae from the ground, probing in muddy flats at the edge of water," said Kwon. "Phalaropes forage in the open water." Red-necked phalaropes spin like tops on the surface of ponds to bring aquatic insects and other food PORTRAIT - A red-necked phalarope chick rests on the hand of a researcher this summer in the Safety Sound area. Breeding female red-necked phalaropes leave the nest as soon as they complete laying their eggs. Their mates incubate the eggs.

Eun bi Kwon, a graduate student at KSU, pointed out a weather station next to one of the Weatherports. "The weather station records climate conditions and is directly related to the study plot," she noted. The research project is part of Kwon's PhD study. She directed the student crew in work at the plot throughout the season. Periodically they drove to Nome to resupply, shower and pick up mail.

Assisting Kwon as field technicians were recent college graduates Erika Escajeda, University of California Berkeley, originally from Boulder, Colorado, and Tommy Esson, Virginia Polytechnic University, whose hometown is Wells, Maine. Willow English, a master's student at SFU conducted a separate study on the mating strategies of rednecked phalaropes and how they affect reproduction. Her field technician was Melanie Wilson, an ecosystems biologist with a master's degree from Dalhousie University in Nova Scotia.

Finding and minding nests

The crew searched for nests on the 1-kilometer by 2-kilometer study plot as eagerly as kids hunting Easter eggs. Their efforts paid off.

"The season went really well," Kwon told the Nugget in an interview on July 24. "We found 152 nests of western and semipalmated sandpipers and 52 nests of rednecked phalaropes. The goal was 120 nests for western and semipalmated sandpipers."

Chicks hatched and were measured at 72 nests occupied by western the better to estimate nest survival rates and test our predictions," Kwon

The students use GPS handheld units to record coordinates for the location of each nest they find, upload the data to computers and plot a map of nests in the study area. Breeding western and semipalmated sandpipers often return to the same nest site they used the previous year, so the students look for the same bird at the same nest year after year to see if it made it back.

When the students find a nest, they place a wire trap over it, wait for the bird to enter and then shut the trap door. They attach a numbered metal band and colored leg band to the bird's leg to uniquely mark each bird. "We try to band both female and male on each nest" Kwon said. "We find 10 to 15 nests daily, so there will be 20 to 30 more birds to band. We can only band sandpipers during the time of incubation." This year one parent was captured at 64 nests but both parents were captured at 85 nests among the western and semipalmated sandpiper nests the crew located, she reports.

The students measure eggs in each nest, estimate the hatch date and schedule daily monitoring of the nest four days prior to the hatch date. The chicks are precocial, meaning they leave the nest soon after hatching, so if researchers miss the hatch date, they miss the opportunity to measure the chicks and may find it hard to determine whether the chicks left the nest or were eaten by a predator just before or after hatching.

OBSERVING NEST TRAP—Erika Escajeda watches a trap placed over a sandpiper nest at a study plot. When a breeding sandpiper returns to the nest, researchers shut the trap door and attach identifying bands to the bird's leg. They also take blood and feather samples from the bird and measure eggs in the nest. Escajeda recently graduated from University of California Berkeley and this summer participated in research focusing on western and semipalmated sandpipers at a Safety Sound site.

Sandpiper research

items up to them from deeper layers. 'We collected terrestrial and aquatic insects every three days," Kwon said. "For aquatic sampling, we used five ponds isolated from other water bodies so they do not contain any salt water from the Sound. We placed bottle traps 10 centimeters from the water's surface. We also used dipnets to collect insect exoskeletons from the surface of the water. We are interested in the change in insect abundance throughout the season and the timing of insect emergence in relation to the timing of hatching of the sandpipers.

Sandpipers, lemmings and voles share the same group of predators-Arctic foxes, red foxes, ravens, ermines, weasels and jaegers. Jaegers also take eggs from sandpiper nests. Lemmings and voles experience boom and bust population cycles. Kwon said the students tried to assess the availability of lemmings and voles on the study plot because research shows predation on shorebirds increases when lemming and vole populations crash.

Early in the season the crew set up a pilot project with 20 of the 200 small mammal traps they brought with them. They planned to capture the little rodents, attach tags with unique number series to their ears, release them and recapture them to estimate their population size. Lemming populations were low in 2011 and they caught none.

Nobody's home

Kwon said 42 nests of western and semipalmated sandpipers were depredated (preyed upon), but the researchers need more information on lemming densities to be sure the depredation rates are related to rodent population numbers. "The population is definitely low, because GEOLATOR-The geolocator attached to the leg of this western sandpiper can be used to track its entire migration route from its breeding grounds at Safety Sound to its winter quarters and back to its nest site. when you see lemmings they are all over," she noted.

"When we find an empty nest we check the estimated hatch date for the eggs," Kwon said. "If the hatch date is way off, we smell the nest cup for urine. Foxes urinate on nests. And we look for shells around the nest and if the scrape has been disturbed."

The fate of 22 western and semipalmated sandpiper nests is unknown because the research crew missed the hatch date and could not relocate the breeder or chicks, Kwon reports. She said 16 nests were abandoned. "When we see eggs in the nest but see no breeders for three or four days, we know the nest has been abandoned," she explained. "It's easy to tell because the eggs must be incubated and maintained at a temperature of 36 to 37 degrees Celsius. If one parent is killed by a predator, the remaining parent cannot take care of the eggs alone and the nest will be abandoned."

Kwon and some of the other students plan to arrive at the Safety Sound research site next spring at about the same time as the migratory shorebirds they study. Nomeites who have become acquainted with them look forward to their return.

Research project support

The project has been made possible by cooperation and land access from the Sitnasuak Native Corporation. Grants from the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game and the National Science Foundation, Office of Polar Programs provide primary support for the research project, titled "Decadal changes in the demography of shorebirds near Nome, Alaska.' KSU and SFU provide matching funds. The Nome offices of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game and the National Park Service and friends in the Nome area have provided logistical support.

"Five of us camped out all summer barring stormy weather in our tents," said Kwon. "However, we felt like we were at home with Pearl Johnson and Dawyn Sawyer who showed enormous hospitality, with Jim Menard who visited our camp often, bringing magazines and cookies, and with Margaret and Conner Thomas who helped us at all times, even after we left Nome. We also appreciated help from ADF&G, the National Park Service and warmhearted Koreans around town. We will miss all the faces, our birds and the summer in Nome.'

School Time, School Time, the Wonderful Golden Rule Time!

Once again we gather to celebrate the start of school. Our students have been waiting for us all summer, staying up late into the midnight sun, fishing, hunting and gathering berries. They have hopefully spent quality time with their families and have learned many of life's greatest lessons from their elders. One thing we know is that all throughout Bush Alaska students are excited about the return of their teachers and the start of school. Their greatest hope for the new school year is a fun, energetic teacher and a friendly principal.

Although our teachers and principals are among the very best educators in Alaska, a teacher and a principal are only part of what is needed for a quality education. Parents, you are your child's most important teacher. It is time to turn off the television, reestablish school night expectations, and get involved in your child's education. Please, go to the school and ask the teachers and principal, "What can I do to help my child? What can I do to help my neighbor's child?" As we go forth into this new school year, let's remember that there is no limit to what can be accomplished when good people surround a common vision and do what is in the best interest of children.

No other animal has the defense method of musk oxen. When danger threatens, they do not run away. Instead, a herd of twenty to forty musk oxen backs into a rough circle facing outward with the calves in the center. This ring of horned heads can defy such natural enemies as the arctic wolf and the grizzly bear. Why is it that musk oxen know how to protect their young from danger, but human beings have such a hard time? We need to become like the musk oxen and form a circle of protection around every single child.

Traveling around this great region, I am reminded at every turn that we are truly blessed to work and live in such a rich land of grandeur and natural beauty. The sparkling waters of the Norton Sound and the Bering Sea from which we gather so much of our food, the bountiful land from which we gather succulent berries and nutritious moose meat and caribou are beautiful, but the greatest beauty of all are the smiles on the young people who will walk this week through the doors of our schools.

As we start this new school year, let us stand strong in the belief that when we teach we teach forever in the heart and the imagination of a child. Let us remind ourselves that we are all teachers, classified and certified, parents and elders, that children are watching us and they are learning as much from our actions and our attitudes as from our words. Let us invest the time and energy that it takes to become true partners in the higher purpose of educating each and every child in all fifteen communities of the Bering Strait School District.

On behalf of the Board of Education, thank you for your commitment to our children. A school should be a place of joy and celebration!

Northern Bering Sea survey seeks insights to king salmon declines

By Laurie McNicholas

Scientists will collect information about the juvenile life history of Norton Sound and Yukon River salmon stocks during a surface trawl survey of the northern Bering Sea shelf Aug. 29 through Sept. 18.

"This survey provides information on a broad spectrum of pelagic fish species, but it is principally designed to address the juvenile lifehistory stages of Norton Sound and Yukon River salmon stocks," wrote chief scientist James Murphy in an email to The Nome Nugget. "The survey also collects oceanographic data to improve our understanding of how recent changes in climate and habitat are impacting salmon and other marine resources in the northern Bering Sea."

Murphy is a fisheries research biologist with the Alaska Fisheries Science Center, National Marine Fisheries Service. He will lead a research team composed of fish biologists Alex Andrews and Keith Cox, oceanographer Lisa Eisner, and acoustician Taina Honkalehto, all of AFSC, and food habits scientist Mary Auburn-Cook of Invert Inc.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has contracted with the F/V Bristol Explorer for the northern Bering Sea research cruise. The 180-foot trawler is blue with a white forward house and a large placard identifying it as a NOAA research vessel. The ship is due to arrive at Nome on Saturday morning, Aug. 27 and to and to depart that evening.

Murphy had intended to invite the public aboard to meet the scientists and learn about data collected on such surveys, but this week he learned the vessel's Nome port call has to be scheduled around barge operations. "Gravel operations are also ongoing on the causeway and this creates an issue with opening up the causeway to the general public," he noted.

From Nome the Bristol Explorer will cruise south to 60 degrees north longitude to begin collecting data at regularly spaced trawl stations between Nunivak Island and St.

Matthew Island. Then the vessel will work northward from trawl station to trawl station into Norton Sound and Bering Strait.

"We will be sampling from east to west along the northern shore of Norton Sound around Sept. 11-12, but will be 20 miles or so from land in most locations other than one station near Nome area," said Murphy. "Our northernmost station will be over 30 miles south of the Diomede Islands.... We will be sampling along the north shore of St. Lawrence [Island] at the end of the survey, around Sept. 17, but will remain over 20 miles offshore of St. Lawrence."

Murphy said the survey is funded through the Alaska Sustainable Salmon Fund and the Arctic-Yukon-Kuskokwim Sustainable Salmon Initiative and will address recent declines in Yukon River Chinook salmon. "It is a cooperative research project with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game designed to improve pre-season forecasts of adult returns and assist the harvest management of Canadian origin Chinook salmon from the Yukon River," he added.

Health advice for the new school year

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Education experts tell us that a healthy child can better handle the rigors of education. Here are a few health tips for preparing students for a healthy school year.

Nutrition: Focus on eating real food this year. Many of us eat a diet high in a processed concoction of chemicals and modified nutrients like carbohydrates, fats, proteins, and certain vitamins. Distinguishing between real healthy foods and unhealthy foods labeled to look healthy can be confusing to children and parents alike. Nutritionists now encourage us to eat "real foods" as opposed to processed foods. This means looking for foods that have an ingredients list of one item or a short list of real foods. For example look for a label that says, "Ingredients: Apples," or "Ingredients: Wheat, yeast, water, and salt." Also, foods harvested from the ocean or tundra are very nutritious. Limit foods labeled with hydrogenated oils, nitrates, high fructose corn syrup, or artificial colors and flavors. Processed foods that contain a long list of chemicals or modified ingredients may inhibit learning, increase mental tigue, worsen attention deficits, and exacerbate behavior prob-DOCTOR lems at school. Medications: If your takes prescription medications, make sure the prescriptions are up-to-date. It is a good idea to schedule a follow up visit with your child's doctor during the first few weeks of school to ensure that the dose of any medication is adjusted to match your child's new weight and school environment. You may also want to ask for a spare supply of some medications, like asthma treatments, to be kept in the school office for emergency use. An annual well child exam is also a good opportunity to ensure immu-

Vision: Around 80 percent of a child's learning involves the eyes. Most children will not tell a parent or teacher about blurred vision because they assume their vision is normal. Therefore, all children should receive vision screening annually. Consider formal testing with an eye doctor if your child has trouble with activities that require good vision like participation sports or reading the board from the back of a classroom. Headaches or trouble reading for long periods may be other signs of eye strain that may be corrected with glasses.

Sleep: Restorative sleep is essential to learning. The American Academy of Pediatrics reports that school-aged children need 9 - 10 hours of sleep each night. Sleep-deprived children will develop increasing problems with concentration, irritability, emotional swings, aggressive behavior, and susceptibility to illness. A recent study in the journal Pediatrics found a connection between sleep deprivation and obe-

the restroom, after playing on the playground, before eating lunch or snacks, and after using school supplies shared with others. Washing hands regularly may be the single best way to reduce the transmission of viruses and bacteria in the school.

Activity: Research consistently shows that exercise improves a child's ability to learn. Even after seemingly light activities, like walking, a child can pay attention longer, score higher on standard tests, and read with better comprehension than when sedentary for long periods of time. As schools are forced to reduce physical education time to make room for meeting national standards it becomes imperative that parents allow time for active play and sports participation in their child's daily routine.

Safe travel: Whether your child is walking, biking, driving, or riding the bus to school it is a good idea to discuss basic safety precautions with them. Wearing bright clothing, looking both ways before crossing, walking around vehicles in full view of the driver, and wearing a bike helmet may seem simple. They are very important parts of public safety during the congested start and end of each school day.

Anxiety: Children respond differently to a new school year. Some children develop anxiety regarding school or interactions with other students. Physical signs of internal emotions may be expressed as headaches, stomach pain, or irritability. Take time to speak with your child about any fears or frustrations regarding their school environment. Monitor and immediately address any signs of bullying.

Setting a good educational foundation for our children will benefit them greatly. Following these guidelines will help provide a positive learning experience for our students.

Port commission mulls land acquisition, fender repairs and removal of Lulu

nizations are up-to-date.

By Diana Haecker

The port commission, with commissioners Charlie Lean, Cam Kristenson, Jim West Jr., and Jimmy Adams present, had a full plate during last week's meeting, hearing from harbormaster Joy Baker and discussing maintenance, improvement and future planning issues.

Baker said that port activity in June saw two mainline barges, multiple cargo vessels serving the villages, two herring fishing tenders and the cruise ship M/S Bremen. The total amount of cargo offloaded in June from the ships were 3,635 tons, which included 80 tons of herring. Only 574 tons left Nome. No fuel was delivered in June. June billing totaled more than $76,000.

The pace changed in July, when the port got really busy and cargo, fuel, gravel, research and equipment vessels in addition to a US Coast Guard cutter and a Korean icebreaker anchoring offshore. Inbound cargo totaled almost 3,400 tons, 5,000 tons of gravel were exported and about 3 million gallons of fuel delivered. Invoicing for July totaled more than $300,000 for all port facility operations.

Addressing the ongoing question about fenders that suffer ice damage in the winter, PND Engineers proposed the installation of so-called camels. Camels are thick rubber buffer or hanging floats that are suspended by heavy chains along the walls of the harbor. Come winter, the camels would be hauled out of the water and not sustain any damage due to heaving ice. Commissioners had a concern how the camels would perform when barges maneuver along the east wall at the small boat harbor to pivot in and out of position. The commission didn't act on the issue, but asked Baker to go back to PND and ask to address the issue of barges pivoting. PND Engineers submitted a cost proposal to fix the fend-

The commission also contemplated the acquisition of a tract owned by Alaska Gold for possible future harbor expansion. The tract is north of the Bonanza tank farm. Commissioner Lean said the property is a clean piece of land, adjacent to city property and the power plant. "It would be a logical place to reserve for the future," Lean said. The commissioners didn't act on the discussion and instructed harbormaster Baker to look at the particulars and the price and to come up with something concrete to be presented to the Nome Common Council.

Two companies submitted a rough estimate and removal plans for the derelict barge Lulu that is sitting in the outer harbor, stranded and full of sand. A company called Global Diving and Salvage estimated a removal cost of almost $1.6 million, the company Magone Marine Service esti-

Saying it Sincerely

When You're Willing to Lose By Pastor Mike Christian, Jr. River of Life Assembly of God

Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"For whoever desires to save his life will lose it, but whoever loses his life for my sake will save It." — Luke 9:24 —

James O. White, 44, thought his civilian job at McClellan Air Force Base was a waste of time and money. So, doing the opposite of what most folks would have done, White took a pencil and paper in hand and wrote a suggestion for the suggestion box.

He told his superiors that the abolishment of his position as an inventory management specialist was in the best interest of all concerned. Now that's something the average person wouldn't do! We would try to hang on to our job as long as possible. But White wasn't the average person.

The suggestion sluggishly moved through the bureaucratic channels for several months until it finally reached the Air Force Logistics Command at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio. Along the way it undoubtedly raised many an eyebrow and a chuckle as well. But at Wright-Patterson, someone appreciated White's idea and agreed with him. So, in a short time, his job was scrapped.

The passage in Luke 9:24 says that whoever loses himself will find himself. James White's actions were an example of that law being put into practice. He considered his job a burden on the taxpayers and saw a better way of getting the job done. And he was willing to risk his livelihood for the betterment of his employer. He got self out of the way and put a desire to do what was best above his own personal interests.

All of us should follow White's example. Many of us have never "lost ourselves." We think of ourselves as the number-one player in this game of life, and our thoughts hardly ever go beyond our own interests.

life, and our thoughts hardly ever go beyond our own interests.

Years ago a "Carpenter" (Jesus), told some friends of his that if they would lose themselves they could find themselves. In fact, he said, one could never find one's true self until one had lost one's self. And he went on to say that the person who was continually looking out for number one would inevitably lose what he did have. The principle is true not only in a spiritual sense but in the whole of life itself. When we are ready to lose, then we are ready to find.

And what became of James O. White? It's true that he lost his job, but he also received a check for a thousand dollars for his suggestion. And he was promoted to supervisor. He lost himself to find himself.

May the Lord help each of us seek his good and perfect will for our lives and learn to let go of our own selfish desires so that others may be blessed and their needs be met. mated a cost of almost $2.3 million. The commission voted unanimously to put out a request for proposals and see what other proposals and plans come back.

In new business, PND Engineers, design contractors for the Port of Nome, submitted a proposal to expand the inner boat harbor by adding mooring on the western bank of the Snake River. They propose to dredge a significant portion of the area to accommodate more boats. Baker said that holding back on having the design work done would not really be an option since Corps of Engineers permits are needed. "Getting a permit is not an easy task, there will be a lot of paperwork going back and forth," said Baker.

PND offered to do a pre-engineering design study, partial design and the final design with bidding and construction documents with cost estimates for $286,000.

In other business, Mayor Denise Michels requested in a letter to U.S. Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo that the Coast Guard consider the Nome port to station one of four new fast response cutters for the purpose of patrolling Norton Sound, the Bering Strait, Kotzebue Sound, Chukchi and Beaufort Seas and the Arctic Ocean.

Obituary

"Unuqturraq' Elias John Akaran Sr.

Elias John Akaran Sr. was born September 9, 1934 at Pastolik, to Joseph and Anna Akaran.

On January 6, 1958, Elias married Natalia Ada Lupsin. Together they had ten children (four deceased). The children are Rosaline, Elsie, Justina, Ursula, Dorothy, Joseph, Elias, Jr., Nora, Maggie Lou, and Daniel.

Elias completed as far as the third grade at Chaneliak. He left school to provide for his family and gather food— the subsistence lifestyle. In his early years, he worked as a carpenter, longshoreman, emergency firefighter, Army National Guardsman and a Chevron employee.

Dad always had his own ways of teasing all his children and grandchildren by nicknames he gave them, not by their given names. Elias enjoyed driving his ATV with his wife Natalia and son Daniel, Eskimo dancing and singing, listening to fiddle dance and country music. He enjoyed teaching his grandchildren the subsistence way of life. He also liked to dance to fiddle music. Most of all he enjoyed spending time with his grandchildren. When each grandchild or great-grandchild was able to grasp, he would always tease them with "Tootsie Pops" smiling and laughing.

Elias Akaran, Sr. was preceded in death by his children Elias Jr., Dorothy, Jenny and an infant; his brother and sister-in-law Nicholas and Pauline Akaran, sister Mary Trader, nieces Diane Gallager, Aida Kamkoff, nephew Michael Akaran, grandson Johnny Prince, granddaughter Sienna Lockwood; Daisy Akaran, Kenneth Akaran, Marcia Akaran and Benjamin Akaran.

Former Nomeite buys the Sounder

Jason Evans who was born and raised in Nome and his wife Kiana Peacock, born and raised in Kotzebue have purchased three newspapers: The Arctic Sounder, The Dutch Harbor Fisherman and The Bristol Bay Times. They also purchased two specialty papers, The Equipment Shopper and The Bush Shopper.

Evans says he has always been a supporter of community newspapers and knows how anxious people are to get their paper as quickly as possible. Although he and his wife reside in Anchorage, Evans says he will be working out the logistics of hiring a reporter in Kotzebue and covering the news in Barrow.

They purchased the publications from Calista Corporation. Calista said the increasing cost of printing, fuel, paper and distribution were not in their long-term financial interests and decided to liquidate the Alaska Newspaper Inc. chain.

Evans is vice-president of consulting for Alaska Growth Co. and owner of Financial Alaska. He is a board member of Alaska Community Foundation, Chairman of Sitnasuak, on the board of Bering Straits Native Corporation, and a community advisory member of KNBA Radio. Peacock works for Alaska Airlines and is president of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers Local Lodge 601 and chief shop steward for employees of Alaska Airlines

Judge approves Jesuits' reorganization plan

Checks on the way to settle with Alaska sexual abuse victims

By Diana Haecker

With the confirmation of the reorganization plan for the Society of Jesus, Oregon Province, the last chapter of the legal battle for justice is written in the almost decadelong fight of sexual abuse victims at the hands of Catholic clergy in Alaska and other parts of the Pacific Northwest.

Last week, US bankruptcy judge Elizabeth Perris in Oregon approved the Jesuits' plan to reorganize and come out of Chapter 11 bankruptcy. This means that months of negotiations between the Jesuits, their insurance companies, the creditor's committee – a committee representing the abuse victims – and various state lawyers have come to an end and that victims will receive their share of the $167.8 million soon.

James Stang of Los Angeles, the bankruptcy lawyer representing the creditors, said that checks for 25 percent of the total amount that victims get paid, are already in the mail and distributed. The remainder of the money will be paid by mid-September, once the Jesuits settle the entire balance. Stang declined to reveal the range of payments made to victims. He said there were 510 sexual abuse survivors who had filed a claim against the Jesuits, but also there were some physical abuse claimants.

A retired judge from California, William Bettinelli, was selected to decide the amount that each abuse survivor is paid out. Stang said that process included reviewing the paperwork on each claimant and a personal interview upon request. Stang said that the creditors' committee suggested guidelines that took into account the age of the victim when the abuse happened, the extent of the abuse and how it affected the adult lives of the abused.

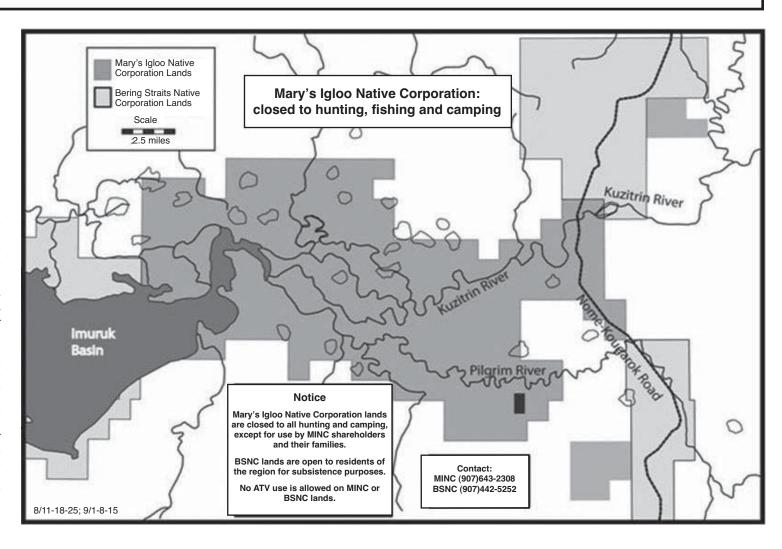

The provincial superior of the Society of Jesus, Oregon Province issued a public statement but was not available for additional comment. The Very Rev. Patrick Lee said in the statement that the emergence from Chapter 11 is not just the end to a long, legal proceeding, but also a beginning to lasting healing and peace. "On behalf of my fellow Jesuits, I want to express our most sincere sorrow and apology for the pain and hurt caused by our men who did not live up to their vows," the statement said. "It has been a sad period of time for all involved. My prayer is for all who are hurting to begin healing; to find forgiveness; and to achieve the peace of heart and mind that they deserve." Lee also thanked friends of the Jesuits. "Without their encouragement and prayers this sad and difficult time would have been that much more challenging for us to endure."

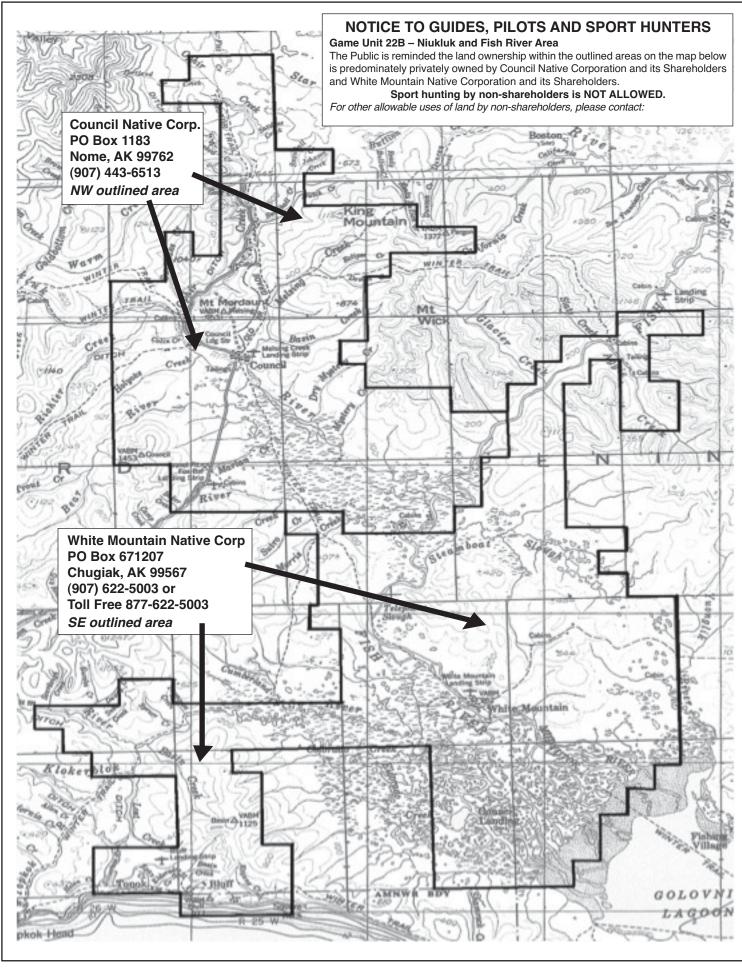

Lee wrote that they now refocus their energies to support the Jesuits' works in education, spiritual formation, parish work and other assignments dedicated to social justice. "[...] we will not forget the actions of the past and the pain we have caused. We will work and pray to ensure that this sad history is not repeated." Lee wrote.

Alaska lawyer Ken Roosa, who represented close to 210 Alaska sex abuse survivors said that the settlement included a future claims fund endowed with $7 million. "This is so that people still can come forward, but they can only make a claim against the claims fund, not against the order," Roosa explained.

The settlement between the victims and the Northwest chapter of the Jesuits order marks the third largest settlement in the United States. The Los Angeles Archdiocese paid out $660 million and San Diego $198 million. Roosa said he received the first letter claiming abuse at the hand of Catholic clergy in April 2002. That year, hundreds of people came forward in Boston claiming they were sexually abused by priests as children. The flood of claims forced Catholic dioceses across the country to seek bankruptcy protection, including the Fairbanks Diocese and the Jesuit order.

Roosa said that villages where priests and church workers abused minors included Chevak, Hooper Bay, Kotlik, Nunam Iqua, St. Mary's, Emmonak, Holy Cross, Nulato, Kaltak, St. Michael, Stebbins and Nome. Nome priest Jim Poole was named in multiple lawsuits alleging sexual abuse of young girls in Nome, St. Mary's, Portland and Barrow. "This marks the end of a long legal process," Roosa said. "But it's not the end for the victims because they have to live with the consequences of the abuse."

Broadband internet services on the horizon for Nome and region

By Diana Haecker

Only one person of the Nome public attended an informational meeting last week on plans to expand broadband internet service to Nome and some of the Bering Strait region. While southwest Alaska has been connected via microwave repeater towers and fiber optic cables earlier this year, plans are already in the making to extend the system from Grayling to Nome starting next year.

The project is called Terra Northwest and is paid by Unicom, a subsidiary of GCI, with funding from the Regulatory Commission of Alaska. They propose to install six remote mountain top repeaters, two repeaters towers in Unalakleet and Shaktoolik, and to bury fiber optic cable along the Nome–Council Highway.

Currently, internet service in this region is made possible by receiving signals via satellite. Sun storms and earthly weather sometimes interferes with connectivity and in order to get better, faster and more reliable internet service, the project will pick up where Terra Southwest left off in Grayling.

Three GCI representatives, one Bureau of Land Management manager and an environmental planner were on hand to present the benefits of the extended broadband internet access. The BLM is involved because the project requires BLM rights of way at Otter Creek and the Golovin alternate tower and the buried cable along the Nome-Council Road. With this comes that the project needs to go through the National Environmental Policy Act process, to prepare a scientific assessment of environmental consequences and to give the public a chance to comment.

Presenter Taylor Brelsford with URS said that the project would greatly improve the speed and reliability for telecommunications. This would not only mean faster downloads for recreational internet surfers, but would allow for serious improvements in the field of health care through telemedicine and distance education.

Phase I would begin in 2012 with the installation of a repeater in the Holy Cross Hills, a repeater between Grayling and St. Michael on BLM land, a repeater in Unalakleet at the corner of Main St. and Beach Rd., a repeater ten miles north of Unalakleet and a repeater tower in Shaktoolik at the current GCI antenna.

Phase II would begin in 2013 and put up repeaters at the Reindeer Repeater tower northwest of Shaktoolik, a Golovin alternate repeater ten miles east of Golovin on BLM land, a Skookum Pass repeater at mile 53 of the Nome-Council Highway on State of Alaska land, and a buried fiber optic cable adjacent to the Nome-Council road on BLM managed parcels.

The life-span of the towers is expected to be 25 years. The proposed sites would take up less than an acre and feature a 60-foot high lattice-type tower, microwave antennas about 8 feet in diameter, two 10-ft.

by 20-ft. communications and power equipment shelters and two 4,500 gallon fuel tanks to power the whole unit for one year. Brelsford said that the towers would not have lights on them to reduce environmental impact. Construction would be done by flying materials and crews in by helicopter. Brelsford said noise was identified as one of the concerns. The noisiest time would be during the 150-day construction period when helicopter traffic, and heavy equipment would cause construction noise. After that, he said, noise wouldn't be much of an issue as the generators are equipped with hospital-grade silencers. Two annual maintenance flights would be done and fuel deliveries would occur twice a year for a time period of two to four days.

Environmental concerns include bird strikes on the towers, wildlife disturbance during construction and the possibility of fuel spills.

Brelsford said that during public meetings in Golovin, they were asked to co-located cell phone antennas to the towers or HAM radio repeaters for safety. The presenters agreed that a cell antenna at the planned Skookum Pass tower would be a good idea. Also there were concerns about vandalism and the danger of the fuel tanks being shot at or that the fuel may be stolen. GCI director of broadband development said that there will be security cameras installed and that the fuel tanks are double hulled but are not ballistic

Project manager Christopher Gill said that the concern of high winds and icing lead the planners to decide to use fiber optic cable to be buried along the Nome-Council Road rather than to erect more towers. Rick Barengo, formerly with the Nome DOT, warned that fall storms frequently wash out the roads and to bury the cable accordingly. Stephen Fusilier, BLM lands manager said he would like to hear more from the public. "It is early in the project's process, but we want to hear from the public to make it a project that serves the community," Fusilier said.

Town hall meetings were held in Unalakleet, Golovin, Nome and Grayling last week. Public comments are due by October 31 and by January 2012, the environmental asessment is slated for release. If the BLM finds the project has no significant impact and if all permits are approved, the first phase of construction could begin next sum-

Talk, but no action on AD's contract

By Lori Head

Nome's School Board met August 23 in a work session with all board members present.

Athletic Director contract

Superintendent Michael Brawner had provided the board, a week prior, with ample information regarding the time commitment, responsibilities and estimated per hour pay of the job. Historically, the Nome Athletic Director position has been carried out each school day during two periods and then after school hours as events dictate. The salary has been according to the certified pay schedule with an after duty pay of $5,500 to $8,000, depending on years of experience. Both the two school-day periods and the after duty pay seemed aligned with other school districts polled by Brawner. Board Member Barb Nickels noted later that many districts also had an assistant athletic director.

In the interest of this contract possibly being brought back as an action item by one of the previous naysayers of same, namely board members Barb Amarok and Marie Tozier, discussion followed.

Amarok shared her own calculations of potential activity director times during the school day. Her calculations included the 20 minutes at the beginning of each school day (8:00 to 8:20 a.m.) and the last 50 minutes of the school day (3:10 to 4:00 p.m.), a total of 70 minutes, also being devoted exclusively to AD responsibilities. Brawner and Nickels questioned the notion of factoring the 70 minutes into time designated to AD responsibilities. Amarok felt that with two 50 minute class periods and the additional 70 minutes of before and after class times, or a total of 170 minutes per day, that "there is adequate compensation financially and time provided for the responsibilities to be fulfilled" without requiring the additional $8,000 stipend. When queried by Nickels about the feasibility of this suggestion, Steve Gast, jr/sr high principal, said he didn't think it could be done without students and programs suffering. Gast explained that the stipend covered the numerous hours on Friday evening, Saturday and Sunday that the AD position required.

Tozier stated that before she had received this information she was not aware that the AD was being paid twice, once as a part-time teacher/part-time AD and then re-

Electric bills going up or down?

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome residents by now know that fuel delivered to their houses will run about $5.85 give or take, unless there is another hike in the price before the snow flies. But what about electric costs and the fuel surcharge?

The good news is that the surcharge on each kilowatt-hour is not going up—much, but the bad news is that the surcharge will continue.

The past winter's fuel surcharge has been 16.98 cents. Based on the averaged price of fuel in the Nome Joint Utility System storage tanks after the new barge order and the fuel surcharge formula, the new charge should be 19.79 cents, a jump of 2.81 pennies per kilo-

The utility has been able to realize income from other sources, like equipment rental, but expenses are up all around, so it wouldn't be good to leave the fuel surcharge flatly alone, utility manager John Handeland told the NJUS board Aug. 23. Additionally, the utility had a

Nome Housing Coalition aims to get homeless off the street

Housing summit tackles sober housing, family housing solutions

By Diana Haecker

A Housing Summit held last Friday at Old St. Joe's Hall ended with the resolve to create a Nome Housing Coalition and to identify a project to get Nome's homeless people off the street.

The Nome Emergency Shelter Team together with Norton Sound Health Corporation's Behavioral Health organized the summit to address Nome's homeless and the increasingly tight housing market. Although the Nome housing crunch is broader and deeper in its manifestations, it ties in with last week's Nome Common Council work session with the Nome police chief on how to get a handle on the problem posed by public drunkenness and homelessness.

Sue Steinacher, chairperson for the board of NEST, summarized the common denominator saying that without stable housing, people are not well positioned to be stable, hold own a job and to do well in life. "Housing unites of all these programs whether they are concerned with child welfare or suicide prevention, or getting a GED or just holding a job down, all these things depend on the availability of housing," she said.

Steinacher explained whereverone looks in Nome, housing is at the core of many problems, not only the most visible — homeless people on Front Street in various states of drunkenness. Also, young families have a hard time finding their own place or can't afford to start a new home. This leads to overcrowding as several families share apartments, and it's not rare that two or three families are stacked up in two-bedroom homes. "You talk to people at the Job Center and you find out that everyone of their clients is living with other people," she said. "We've got problems." Professionals don't move to Nome because they hear that there is no housing or they come to Nome, see what's available and the cost and they say 'no way' and leave, Steinacher said.

The limited housing market is compounded by the seasonal influx of construction crews that snatch up housing at prime rates. Another component is Nome's role as the hub for the region and the need for temporary housing.

steinacher said that the Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority has identified housing as key to healthy living and they have a whole division dedicated to housing. It is also not a Nome or Alaska specific problem. Nancy Burke, trust program manager with the Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority, said, "When people who have mental illness or disabling conditions or addictions are falling out of the community safety net, then we know that the community is struggling generally with affordable housing and that is true across the United States."

To learn from successful models in other parts of the nation, the Trust made the connection to the nation-wide non-profit Corporation for Supportive Housing. They came to visit Anchorage and Fairbanks and extended their trip to Nome. A delegation of experts in Native housing development, supportive housing and substance and alcohol abuse programs from Minnesota, Alaska state workers with the Department of

Dear Editor,

We've been in Nome for six days and leave tomorrow, August 25. I've read the entire issue of the Nugget of August 18, 2011.

Your reporters draw the readers in and grab them by the throat and don't let go till the story ends. They can write! The piece by Haecker on the musk ox attack on Bolo, the Icy View dog, was interesting to say the least. (I must tell you musk ox attacks in Seattle are rare.) The Medearis piece on the United States-Russia Polar Bear Commission splitting a harvest of 58 polar bears had me wanting me to learn more. I enjoyed reading the story about Lance Cannon, your new community service officer.

I'd like to salute your layout crew. The newspaper looks great.

As for Enough, your editorial of August 18, H.L. Mencken would put you in for at least a battlefield promotion to general, a distinguished service award and an oak leaf clus-

Dear Nancy,

We had our outboard motor stolen from our camp at Nook this summer. We are elderly and cannot afford this loss. Where are people's values? Where is respect for our property and us?

If anyone knows who took our outboard motor please let us know. Respectfully,

Peter and Margaret Noyakuk P.O. Box 208 Nome, AK 99762

Dear Editor:

Within the last two weeks I have treated three dogs that were gored by musk ox. Two lived, but one died today due to severe trauma.

Musk ox injuries are extremely serious as the wounds are long and deep and often puncture vital organs such as the lungs and abdominal or-

Animal Control needs to address this serious issue. There is an answer. Why is it taking so long? It is just a matter of time before a person is attacked.

Hello out there,

I am still (always) amazed that even though people know that there is an underage driving law they continue to disobey the law by letting their kids drive. So who will they blame when something happens? Furthermore, the kids are not wearing helmets (which is also a law) and getting away with it. So, how are they able to do that? If it was my kids they'd get grounded and be cleaning house.

And if I think that I get upset about people stealing things like my bikes (and ruining them) it's nothing compared to my poor buddy who lives outside of town. Darn hides, you're not supposed to be taking things that aren't yours, you're supposed to earn/buy them yourselves. Those of you should return the things you took from there now.

As for food for the Elders, remember they were doing the subsistence activity before we were, and they miss those kinds of activities, so they would also miss the taste of the food, so don't forget them. After all, they are precious to us.

Yea, our kids are back in school learning like they should be, instead of being bored and getting into mischief. Remember they need to get their beauty rest so they could learn better. Tell them that once they learn whatever they are supposed to learn that day/week and pass the standard, they won't have to worry about that part again for a while.

Anyway, take care. Happy fall. May the rest of your year be prosperous.

As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Get on With It

We can either fish or cut bait. We can sit around and complain and find all kinds of reasons why something can't be done, but if we want to bring about change, we have to do it. Sometimes it seems like an incredibly slow process, but if we focus our efforts we can achieve

There are naysayers who claim something can't be done because there's a law against it. Well, the laws can be changed if the public works to change or modify the law. Somehow we lose sight of how many laws have changed. Old fogies will remember the "Blue Laws." In some states grocery stores couldn't open on Sunday. Ice cream cones could not be sold on Sunday— hence the ice cream Sundae. Beer could not be sold on Sunday. When we look back on some of these laws we laugh. But these laws were changed. So laws can be changed. We need to establish some community goals and come up with a means to achieve them. We need to craft enforceable laws against public inebriation. We need easy-to-enforce open container regulations. We need to crack down on sales of liquor to minors and drunks. We also have the problem of where to put the street drunks and the homeless to keep them from freezing to death. We need a drunk tank and a homeless shelter. We need affordable housing. We need to get rid of the abandoned shacks and firetraps.

There are many things that would improve the quality of life in this town and if we are to achieve them, then we need to work together and apply pressure. We can complain till we are blue in the face, but we won't get anywhere until we come up with the resolve to get the job done. Do we fish or cut bait? - N.LM. -

Bethel's White Alice went down

The last of six towers at the White Alice radar system in Bethel came down last week. KYUK reports that the 60-foot tall tower was dismantled and demolished. The Air Force had determined that the antenna is a hazardous liability and that it had to come down. The White Alice antennas on top of Anvil Mountain are not going to be completely dismantled. With the contaminated soil excavation completed, Tommy Baker with the Air Force said that the metal panels, also called skin, will be taken off, but the front side paneling will remain on the towers.

EPA extends public comment deadline for OCS

The EPA extended the comment period to September 21 for a draft air permit the agency issued to ConocoPhillips Co. The permit is not to be confused with the public comment draft permit given to Shell Offshore Inc. Comments for that permit need to be at the EPA on September 6.

Both draft permits authorize air emissions from oil and gas exploration drilling operations in the Beaufort Sea and Chukchi Sea. Shell plans to operate the Kulluk drill rig and support fleet for exploration drilling beginning in 2012 on the Beaufort Sea OCS. ConocoPhillips plans to operate a jack-up drill rig and support fleet for exploration drilling beginning in 2013 on the Chukchi Sea OCS.

National Guard to help Hurricane Irene victims

The Alaska Air National Guard last week sent crews and equipment to Charleston, W. Va. to provide search and rescue in response to Hurricane Irene. The Alaska Air National Guard's 249th Airlift Squadron left Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson on Saturday with 45 personnel for a two-week deployment. They sent two Pave Hawk helicopters with four flight crews, eight 'Guardian Angels' and 20 maintenance and support per-

agreement

The Alaska Journal of Commerce reports that NANA Regional Corp. and NovaGold Resources Inc. are close to an agreement on a partnership to explore and maybe develop copper and zinc resources in the Ambler mining district. NANA owns mining claims at Ruby Creek and Bornite Creek on the upper Kobuk. NovaGold owns claims in the Ambler mining district.

NovaGold and NANA would combine resources owned by the Kotzebue-based Native regional corporation in the Bornite and Ruby Creek prospects on the upper Kobuk River with NovaGold's Ambler project. As the state is studying ways to open up access to northwest Alaska, resource developers have the ear of the Governor to push for road development under the state's roads to resources program.

NANA, NovaGold to strike Crooked Creek is being re-

Volunteers from Samaritan's Purse and Christian Reformed World Relief Committee began construction of new homes in Crooked Creek for people who lost their homes in this spring's ice jam flooding. The Samaritan's Purse is coordinating this project with CRWRC. They are sending in eight volunteers a week, and Samaritan's Purse is sending in eight volunteers a week. The State's Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management established the Crooked Creek disaster housing task force on May 16 to coordinate resources and develop a comprehensive plan to rebuild the damaged homes in Crooked Creek.

State solicits RFP for costs of ESA listing

The Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development sent out a request for proposals to do a study that would attach costs of the economic impacts resulting from the designation of critical habitat connected with classification of the polar bear as being a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act. The RFP says that the study results would be published in a respected, peer-reviewed journal and delivered at public forums.

Former Nome student critically injured after being hit by car

Alaska State Troopers in Fairbanks report that Jamison Thrun, 11, was hit by a Toyota Highlander on his way to school on Tuesday, around 8:20 am. Troopers say that the child was transported to the Fairbanks Memorial Hospital with life-threatening injuries. As of press time on Tuesday, he was in critical condition. The initial investigation showed that Yiki Kim, 68, failed to stop at a stop sign, passed through the intersection of Loftus Road and Birch Lane and struck the sixthgrader. Kim was arrested on charges of assault in the first degree and reckless driving. The incident is still under investigation. The Alaska Bureau of Highway Patrol is heading up the investigation and receiving assistance from AST Patrol, ABI, UAF Police and the Fairbanks Police Department.

HOUSING CRUNCH— The first Housing Summit held on Friday at Old St. Joe's Hall attracted about 40 participants from various Nome agencies and organizations to discuss the town's problems associated with the lack of enough and adequate housing. The event ended with the commitment to create a Housing Coalition and to identify building projects.

Housing

Health and Social Services, technical support and a member of the Alaska commission on the aging accompanied Nancy Burke to Nome to facilitate the housing summit.

The visitors gave presentations on models of supportive housing in Duluth, Minnesota. Supportive housing means that the occupants are getting support for any kind of social services they need, be it for alcohol or substance abuse, as the project San Marco apartments, or other social services.

The San Marco apartments in Duluth is a 'wet' housing unit with 70 apartments, helping homeless drug addicts and alcoholics get the help they need. Presenter Gary Olson, the CEO of the Center for Alcohol and Drug treatment in Duluth said that it sounds like enabling the occupants to get stuck in their habits, but it does save the city money that would be spent on medical services when they needed to get picked off the street by police or local emergency respon-

Sound familiar? He said that about 20 percent of the population cause about 80 percent of a city's problems, and to address this particular group does save the city money. But he also added money is not everything. "San Marco offers hope. Healing is not always about curing but about healing the human spirit," Olson said. The facility is based on the concept of "housing first" that puts housing as the basis. As people have a safe place to live in and return to, then they have the capacity to heal from the trauma of being homeless or to tackle their addictions or alcohol problems with the help of services that are offered.

Sue Steinacher said the concept opened her eyes to what she calls a 'counter-intuitive' approach. "I was one of the naysayers, saying that we are enabling people, but I've come 180 degrees around. If we take care of these folks, we save money and create healthier people," Steinacher said about 40 participants that included not only Kawerak and Norton Sound Health Corporation social service providers but also members of Nome's private building sector, Mitch Erikson with the Nome Chamber of Commerce, Rep. Neal Foster and Senator Donny Olson's legislative aide.

The housing summit attracted

Mitch Erikson suggested to make room in Nome for new housing by tearing down all houses unfit for human habitation, have an entity purchase the land and develop affordable housing.

Melanie Bahnke, vice president of Kawerak Inc., said that in order to get started with a comprehensive housing plan for Nome, one needs to find out what projects are in the works at the various entities in town. Creating low income housing for working people who have a hard time to afford rent and the need for sober housing rose to the top of the to-do list. Nancy Burke then said it would be easier to tackle a project

OFFERING GUIDANCE— Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority official Nancy Burke led the discussion during the Housing Summit held last week. Burke suggested to start a Nome Housing Coalition and to identify housing projects right away. Burke was accompanied by a delegation of supportive housing experts from Duluth, Minnesota and representatives from State Department of Health and Social Services, among others. Burke offered the services of her agency to help Nome's new housing coalition to get housing projects off the ground.

couple of significant projects that might need to be addressed this year—fuel tank farm foundation and generator integration.

Therefore, Handeland recommended the board consider adjusting the fuel surcharge to 18.385 cents capturing one-half the available tariff, a raise of 1.4 cents per kilowatt, which would, with a higher state assistance coming in based on the fuel cost this year, mean a residential bill for 500 kilowatts would go down by $3.04 per month. Kilowatts used over 500 would cost more, as would business accounts, which are not eligible for Power Cost Equalization state subsidy. The board approved this idea unanimously.

This means that a residence using exactly 500 kwh in a month would have a bill of $220.03 comprising the following charges: facilities meter, $5.00; total electricity, $187.68; residential water (not metered), $36.00; residential sewer, $43.00; residential garbage—one—time—per—week, $22.77; city landfill maintenance fee, $12.50; sales tax——4 percent, $12.08, all adding up to $314.03. Subtract $94.00 PCE credit to bring the total down to $220.03. These figures derive from a per kwh price of $0.3754.

Nome man charged on attempted murder

By Sandra L. Medearis

Al R. Ahnangnatoguk, 54, has been charged on attempted Murder in First Degree after his sister, Brenda Ahnangnatoguk, 47, was slashed multiple times with an ulu and then shot with a 22 rifle midday Aug. 21. A grand jury handed up an indictment Aug. 26 with the attempted murder charge plus five other felony counts related to the event. Ahnangnatoguk was in custody and arraigned in Anchorage Superior Court Monday, Aug. 29.

According to court records, Al Ahnangnatoguk ran from the scene and later came to the Emergency Room at Norton Sound Regional Hospital with a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the chest.

Emergency air service took the two to Anchorage for treatment.

A charging document entered into court record by Nome Police Department investigation Aug. 24 said that a call came reporting a man attacking a woman. When Sgt. Byron Redburn reached the scene, he saw Anangnatoguk running from the scene carrying a rifle. Brenda Ahnangnatoguk was found with multiple cuts at the side of the road near the residence at 400 W. Fourth Avenue. A bloody ulu knife was also found. An ulu is a traditional Eskimo multipurpose "woman's" knife with a curved blade and the handle mounted on top, parallel to the knife blade. Investigation revealed spent 22 magnum cartridges and a 22 Magnum Marlin rifle in the residence along with evidence of a prolonged struggle in which a victim had received serious injuries from multiple strikes and slashes, and that Ahnangnatoguk blocked the victim's escape from "at least one exit point through violence of force." A second rifle was found at a residence north of the scene that had a large amount of blood smeared on it, according to court documents.

"Further, that the defendant stated to AST Investigator Shannon Fore that he intended to cut his sister's throat with the ulu to kill her and then cut his own throat to end his life," according to the court document filed by Redburn on Aug. 24. On that day, the court issued a warrant setting bail of $100,000 for Ahnangnatoguk's arrest on attempted murder and two associated felonies.

A grand jury met Friday morning, Aug. 26 and handed up an indictment increasing the charges to Murder One, attempted; two felony A charges of Assault One, Serious Injury with a Weapon (gun and ulu against Brenda Ahnangnatoguk); three felony B counts of Assault 3, Cause Fear of Injury with Weapon (one concerning a daughter of Brenda Ahnangnatoguk in the residence and two against a pair who came to help).

According to the report, Ahnangnatoguk pointed a rifle at witnesses who came to help Brenda Ahnangnatoguk. They were afraid they would be shot, according to state-

Knife threat sends Gambell man to jail

By Sandra L. Medearis

Ladd Soonagrook, 51, said he didn't remember pulling a knife and waving it at four patrons of the Breakers Bar Saturday night, Aug. 27, but a Nome Police Department charging document filed after their investigation says he did threaten people with a knife.

Soonagrook has been charged on three counts of Assault-3, Cause Fear of Injury with A Weapon and one count of Criminal Mischief -3 Damage $500+. Soonagrook told police, according to charging documents, that he had been "drinking for weeks," and remembered only drawing his knife blade along a rear quarter panel of a Checker Cab driven by Wally Merrill.

A female bartender at the bright orange booze dispensary on Front Street told police she pushed him out the door, but he came back in, waving a knife at four people. After he was ejected again by the four helpers, he waved his knife at them outside and, according to court records said, "I am going to cut all of you." Soonagrook then took off up Division Street, throwing his knife away along the way. Police found the knife, which they say had a five-inch blade, according to court documents.

The damage to the taxicab van exceeds $500. Soonagrook was jailed and bail set at $5,000.

first and then formalize an entity such as the Nome Housing Coalition. Representatives for Kawerak, NEST and Behavioral Health signaled their willingness to be on the coalition and to make a concerted approach to solve the housing problem. Nancy Burke, with the Trust, said if she had a magic wand she would start with a family project and a project for the people who might die in the streets this winter. "I would move these two projects through while you assess what the next projects are,"

Burke said.

"I'm overwhelmed by the support of the community, not only from social service providers, but also business owners and that broad support shows me that Nome is much further along than most communities," she said. Kawerak has organized a socalled funder's forum to take place in September with representatives from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Alaska Housing Finance Corporation, Denali Commission, Rasmuson Foundation and Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Zoe Lebeau with the Corporation for Supportive Housing said that now is the time to take advantage of funding streams that are available from federal and state agencies. "There is a perfect storm brewing in terms of funding," she told the audience. She explained that both the federal government as well as the state has made a commitment to supportive housing.

"The federal government and the state have seen that cycling people in and out of homelessness is not a good way to treat their disabilities and it's not humane, so there are a lot of resources available," Lebeau said. "There is money and resources available, there is technical assistance available from the Alaska Mental Health Trust, the state is responsive and this is the time for Nome to act."

The first step toward preventing deaths by the mix of alcohol and freezing temperature has been taken. NEST has received a grant to be open every night from November 15 through April 15. But more housing for the general population is needed.

Outside Old St. Joe's Hall, Luke Kulukhon asked who all these people were that streamed out into the open from Old St. Joe's on Friday afternoon. A housing summit? His eyes brightened up and he said, "Oh, good. I need to find a house." Kulukhon said that he currently lives with his grandchildren, and the house is just getting too crowded. At age 75, he now wonders if he needs to go look for a job in order to pay for an apartment. He produces an application for an apartment at Munaqsri Senior housing from his coat pocket and wonders who will help him fill it out. So, a housing summit, he said to himself. "Good, we need housing."

ceiving the after duty pay as well. Another concern Tozier expressed was the number of times someone was paid a stipend to cover for the AD when he was traveling. It was determined that happens about twice a school year and is deducted from the AD's stipend beginning at six absences.

Among other responsibilities Tozier envisioned for the AD position she commented, "I hesitate to say this but I see this position as part of some good old boys club where you get in there, and you keep getting your contract. And your performance, even if people are complaining about you, it doesn't really matter because your good old boys buddies are the ones that are going to evaluate you and tell everybody it's OK and we're not paying them enough and let's just keep going and get it done and I..." At that point Gast responded, "Marie, I take exception with being called a good old boy since I'm the one that evaluates him. I've been here one year. I have no good old boy in me with anybody in this community."

Gast informed the board that per the negotiated agreement, the stipend amount depending upon experience, had to be offered to Nome's AD. Tozier interjected that she was not satisfied the AD needed the two school periods to perform the duties. Nickels added, "And you have to think that you asked Mike to do all this research. And all his research showed that school systems off the road systems get two periods and a stipend between $5,000 and $8,000. So, if you don't bring this back to the table, it's not about the contract."

Ultimately, neither naysayer, Tozier or Amarok were willing to bring the contract back to the table as an action item. However, board majority with board members Karmun, Brennan and Nickels did advise Brawner to advertise for an AD with two periods of a school day and a stipend. Seeking clarification on whether this was a contract issue or if the board preferred the existing individual whose contract had been tabled to not apply, Karmun answered that she thought the current AD could apply for the position.

HLP Program

Kristen Ogilvie of Pacific Institute for Research and Evaluation began the meeting with information regarding a program that identifies harmful, legal products in the home, school and retail business and teaches the community how to change policies, create barriers of availability and promote an awareness. Nome has been randomly selected as a Comparison Community

(a base) and Ogilvie was seeking a nod from the board to move forward. One component would involve the school district being compensated to implement the Drug Use & Attitude Survey to Nome's 5th, 6th and 7th graders and then follow-up with the same students two years later as 7th, 8th and 9th graders.

Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) Salary Floor

Brawner shared a letter he drafted to Jim Puckett of Alaska's Division of Retirement and Benefits spelling out the unique circumstances that led Nome Public Schools to drop below the salary floor established in 2008. The letter requested that the state either "decrease or completely eliminate the outstanding PERS balance billed to NPS." There is a 12 percent fee of $6,100 if the bill is not paid by the end of August.

Career/Technical Education (CTE)

Brawner informed the board that he has begun to meet with local organizations and plans on conducting interest inventories of students to initiate a pilot CTE program this year. He mentioned partnering in health, business, natural resources and/or land management areas as potential areas. Brawner hoped that if classes were offered that students who were interested in it would address the dropout rate. Nickels thought the idea was "awesome" but cautioned that they "try to define and design a pilot program that Nome Public Schools could fund" noting that many local organizations are "hurting." Gast added that money has already been spent and they have the

Legislators seek input on proposed Alaska Transportation Infrastructure Fund

By Laurie McNicholas

Members of the Transportation Infrastructure Fund Subcommittee of the Alaska House Finance Committee discussed formidable statewide transportation challenges at a hearing in Nome on Aug. 19. The challenges include 40- to 50-year-old highways, population growth resulting in traffic congestion, aging Alaska Marine Highway System ferries, airports in need of upgrades and major maintenance, deteriorating harbors, limited access to natural resources and $16.8 billion worth of backlogged transportation projects and deferred maintenance.

The subcommittee also took public testimony on proposed legislation to reinstate an Alaska Transportation Infrastructure Fund that was in place at statehood. This year the following three pieces of legislature were introduced to reinstate ATIF.

- House Joint Resolution 4 would put a proposal before voters in November 2012 to amend the Alaska Constitution to reinstate a dedicated fund for transportation projects. HJR 4 proposes to amend the constitution to require deposit of revenues from the motor fuel tax, studded tire tax, vehicle rental tax, vehicle registrations fee, drivers license fees, and any new transportation related fees or taxes into the transportation fund.
- House Bill 30 establishes how the fund will be governed.
- House Bill 31 asks the legislature and the governor to appropriate $1 billion to capitalize the fund.

Subcommittee members at the hearing were Rep. Anna Fairclough of Eagle River, chair; Rep. Mia Costello of Anchorage; and Rep. Peggy Wilson of Wrangell. Rep. Les Gara of Anchorage participated in place of fellow Finance Committee member Mike Doogan of Anchorage.

Wilson, who chairs the Transportation Committee, co-sponsored HJR 4, HB 30 and HB 31. She provided a 30-minute description of the proposed legislation and findings related to it. She said the framers of the Alaska Constitution grandfathered in two transportation funds. When legislators wanted a motor fuel tax in 1961, they were told they had to get rid of the funds to put it in place, but the attorney general now says they could have had both, she added.

Wilson said the House Transportation Committee held hearings for three years, made on-site visits to view rural and urban transportation issues, discussed funding options with federal, state and banking infrastructure experts, and rejected options that committed future state general funds before developing the proposed legislation.

Wilson said federal funds for transportation are not keeping up with growing demands nationwide and are projected to decrease by 33 percent in 2013. She also noted that state general funds are consumed by increasing healthcare, corrections, education and other costs with little left over for transportation. Nearly 90 percent of state general fund revenues come from the sale of Alaska's crude oil, production of which is declining, she added.

Wilson predicted the ATIF would provide more 100 percent state funded projects, which cost less and take less time to complete than federally funded projects with lengthy, proscriptive requirements. Pat Kemp, deputy commissioner of the Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities, agreed that DOT/PF could save time and money on projects if allowed to inject state funds in them. "We could better use federal aid if we had state general funds," he added. Kemp summarized current and planned transportation projects in the Nome area during the hearing.

Wilson provided the following information about management of the fund, the formation of an advisory council and criteria for ATIF projects. The Dept. of Revenue will manage the fund, and profits from the fund will be reinvested. The amount of appropriations from the fund will be based on 6 percent of market value averaged over the previous five years plus 50 percent of tax and fee revenues from the previous year. ATIF appropriations will follow the regular budgetary process requiring legislative approval and approval by the governor.

A 17-member ATIF advisory council will include public members appointed by the governor, stakeholder members, the commissioner of DOT/PF and non-voting legislative members. The DOT/PF will develop project ranking criteria, and the council will numerically rank projects.

ATIF projects will be limited to capital transportation and major maintenance projects less than or equal to 80 percent-highways and roads; 25 percent-aviation; 25 percent-marine highway system; 20 percent-harbors and harbor matching grant funds, 20 percent-community transportation and transit, and 15 percent-trails and bike paths. Wilson said the guidelines ensure the distribution of funds across multiple modes of transportation. Federalized projects will be limited to not more than 20 percent.

The ATIF appropriation is expected to total about $100 million in 2014, and to increase annually as the fund grows in value. The ATIF is projected to nearly double in value in 20 years.

Fairclough said Rep. Bill Stoltze of Wasilla has raised an issue about the gravity of the proposed constitutional amendment, pointing out that if it moves through the legislature, legislators could try to open up the constitution for other issues. Stoltze is a member of the Transportation Infrastructure Fund Subcommittee.

Several persons expressed concerns about amending the constitution at a subcommittee hearing held Aug. 18 in Fairbanks, she added.

Fairclough said Stoltze shares her concern about a 6 percent annual withdrawal from ATIP. "A 4 percent drawdown might be better in the current economy," she suggested. She also said questions have been raised about the formation of a council with 17 members.

Gara said he is not sure about taking $1 billion from state savings for ATIF, and he is skeptical the fund would expand as projected.

Public testimony

Testifying on behalf of the City of Nome, Mayor Denise Michels asked the subcommittee to incorporate the Alaska Railroad in the ATIF framework, to provide for fair rural representation on the advisory council, to raise the ATIF funding cap from 20 percent to 35 percent for harbors and harbor matching grant funds, and from 20 percent to 35 percent for community transportation and transit projects.

She said Bering Strait is a marine traffic choke point that will require search and rescue services. Dockings at the Port of Nome have increased from 30 in 1980 to 298 in 2010, she added. Michels said the city supports the Western Alaska Access Planning Study (Road to Nome).

Michels provided separate testimony on behalf of Kawerak, Inc. as transportation director and manager of reservation roads program for the tribal consortium. She described local roads, trails and dust abatement projects Kawerak has completed in Bering Strait communities. She asked the subcommittee to consider raising the ATIF cap for community transportation and transit projects from 20 percent to 35 percent because the Denali Commission lost funding that went to the DOT/PF. She said Kawerak supports an appropriation of $1 billion in state funds for ATIF in HB 31.

Michels requested that specific language be added to HB 30 for fair tribal representation on the ATIF advisory council. She said not a lot of rural tribes are Alaska Inter-Tribal Council (AITC) members.

Fairclough asked whether the City of Nome or Kawerak had discussed the proposed constitutional amendment. Michels said the topic had not been brought up, noting that approval by two-thirds of each legislative body is required.

Rep. Neal Foster of Nome urged subcommittee members to look at the issue of rural Alaska representation on the advisory council. "AITC may be best, but look at that more," he suggested. "Get more input from Kawerak and other region tribes."

Richard Beneville of Nome said when the Bob Blodgett Nome-Teller Highway was built, Blodgett anticipated oil exploration in the late 1960s. The road provides access to a deepwater harbor, and the U.S. Navy may need a deepwater port in the area with increased tourism and oil exploration in arctic waters, he noted.

Wendy Lindskoog, Alaska Railroad vice president for corporate and governmental affairs, asked the subcommittee to find a way to integrate the railroad in ATIF legislation. "Give us a seat on the advisory council and make the statute wide enough so if there is a big project out to rural Alaska, we are already written into the statute," she suggested. She said she would present formal testimony on behalf of the railroad at the subcommittee's hearing in Anchorage.

Sen. Donny Olson was not available for comment on the proposed legislation. His staff said he is traveling outside the United States until the second week of September.

Rotary's newest Citizen of the Year

By Anna Hahn

Wearing a red Decemberists tee, high tops to match, and sitting calmly in his classroom at Anvil City Science Academy, Todd Hindman is no stranger to the community of Nome. With his participation and contributions to the DAWN program, KNOM, Soup 'er' Bowl, the Halloween Happening, NEA Alaska, the Nome Pool, and countless other organizations, he is at last being recognized by the Nome Rotary Club as Citizen of the Year.

Hindman recalls, "I thought I was just coming to the Rotary meeting to speak about school and DAWN and then Lew [Tobin] got up and started talking about me. I was very surprised."

"Our first Citizen of the Year Award went to Connie Madden for her work in the community and her creation of the DAWN program in Nome," said Tobin when awarding this honor to Hindman. "Now, it seems the award has come full circle with this year's winner who has taken over many of Connie's tasks in the DAWN program as well as adding a few of his own."

Before moving to Nome, Hindman had been teaching in Texas, "Basically what brought me here was the job. I was only planning on being here for two years and then I was going to move on. But you can see how that worked out." He has now lived in Nome for 12 consecutive years.

Citizens of the Year are not chosen for the work they accomplish in their professional career, although Hindman is a solid role model for the community's youth. As head teacher at ACSA, he has guidelines and prospects for each student, "I have high expectations for the kids, I stay consistent with them, I try to be fair, and I try to teach with humor-even though my sense of humor is very sarcastic," he said.

Beginning eight years ago, Hindman took a risk and began to introduce Nome to several indie and alternative genres of music via a radio show on KNOM. He called his program Under the Radar. On this Tuesday evening program Hindman explains, "I enjoy playing what I like to call indie rock and progressive dance. I play a lot of electronica music to folk rock, just a variety."

Hindman is a co-executive of Drugs Aren't Wanted in Nome (DAWN), and he is head and sole chef for the Souper-Bowl, an annual fundraiser that last year raised $3,200. All proceeds from this event go to student groups and last year were donated to the new Drama Club at Nome-Beltz High School.

"I make all of the soups and I keep on switching them up," says Hindman. "One of my favorites from the past is winter squash chowder." It takes a week for him to prepare all 20 varieties of soups and stews for the event as well as soup cookbooks that are sold at the benefit.

Hindman has also annually taken on the hat as organizer of the Halloween Happening. He has been active in the local Teacher's Association since moving to Nome, and has been on the Board of Directors of the National Education Association, Alaska for the last two years. In his spare time Hindman is a lifeguard at the local pool, a photographer, and an active cyclist (he can often be spotted cycling to work or riding the Dexter loop).

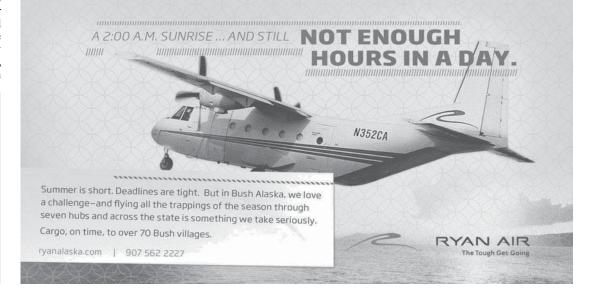

"I'm really honored to be Nome's Citizen of the Year. It was nice to be seen as someone who is just now becoming in charge of DAWN, that Connie Madden was the first one honored with this award for her work with DAWN," smiled Hindman.

Utility board restates opposition to fluoride

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome is utility board has made it clear they want John K. Handeland, utility manager, to send a resolution to Nome Common Council calling a halt to fluoridation of the area water supply coming from Moonlight Springs. Fluoridation is the practice of adding a fluoride compound to the public drinking water supply ostensibly for the purpose of fighting tooth decay.

A local dentist, Mark Kelso, a month ago told the Council the fluoride was needed to prevent tooth decay, that the Council should just send that resolution back to the Nome Joint Utility System Board of Directors. However, the utility had not yet sent a resolution to the Council; it was only waiting in the wings. NJUS had passed a resolution to hand to the Council to put a stop to putting what several board members called "poison" in the water.

Kelso said when he had first come to Nome years ago there was no fluoridation of the water. "I had many patients in their teens and twenties, who I had to take their teeth out and make them dentures," he told the Council during citizen comment period July 27.

Then the City started to fluoridate the water, Kelso said, and slowly over the years [the need for dentures] has slowly disappeared. "And I can contrast that with a lot of my patients from the village that don't get fluoridated water, and I still have to take their teeth out and make them den-

tures" he said

The City of Fairbanks has dropped fluoridation after a task force study. The federal Dept. of Health and Human Services has recommended fluoridation be reduced in municipal water supplies because of fluoride naturally occurring in drinking water. Kelso said a "buddy" at Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium backed him on the fluoride question, and the agency would pay for equipment and fluoride for Nome water.

Kelso maintained there was zip naturally occurring fluoride in Nome's water supply. Handeland said he intended to commission an independent assessment of the amount of natural fluoride in the water supply. Those who oppose fluoridation depend on pseudoscience and "hysteria often trumps science because it sounds scary," Kelso said. The Council asked Kelso to list the sources he was using.

Kelso has in the past, on the television series Kids Healthworks, attributed poor dental health and the need for dentures for young people to lack of brushing and poor diet—"too many sweets, too little brushing, and apathy."

At the Aug. 23 NJUS board meeting, Handeland said a test confirmed there was no naturally occurring fluoride in water coming out of the springs, that a previous test showing fluoride at .73 parts per million had inadvertently used artificially fluoridated water instead of untreated

That's when the solid waste hit the fan. If there was a discrepancy with the numbers and the fluoride, that concerned utility director Carl Emmons

"When you're talking about putting something toxic and poison in someone's drinking water," Emmons said. "You ought to be damned accurate. If we are putting medication in someone's water we ought to be sure about it."

The fact that Kelso had presented no hard science concerned Berda Willson, board president. "I'd like some statistical data. We keep hearing all the anecdotal data," Willson said.

Emmons observed that with introduction of fluoride into the water, dental care became better when people became conscious of tooth care.

Board member Pat Johanson agreed. "People came to school with toothbrushes and big tooth models. Before then, people didn't brush teeth as much," he said.

"As far as we have come today with the amount in toothpaste, water inherently, food and everywhere else, at the cost I can't believe there would be any advantage," Fred Moody observed.

Several board members thought village dental health was improving because of the presence of good health aides. Emmons asked Handeland to give the antifluoride resolution to the Council as voted at a prior meeting.

The Center for Disease Control and prevention reports that the splotchy tooth condition, fluorosis, resulting from fluoridation, is unexpectedly common in kids ages 12 through 15. And it appears to have grown much more common since the 1980s. However, CDC is a proponent of fluoridation.

About 67 percent of U.S. cities have fluoridated water supplies. Fluoridation of municipal water works began about 65 years ago. Opponents of fluoride in municipal domestic water supplies say the practice stemmed from the Manhattan Project and when millions of tons of fluoride were used in the manufacture of bomb grade uranium and plutonium. Also, large amounts of fluoride were generated in producing aluminum required for warplanes. With events already on record where fluoride damaged crops, livestock and people downwind from industrial plants, government and industry with officials running the Manhattan Project, sought to spin fluoride around to a happier face to dampen public objection to fluoride emissions and to slowdown costly litigation. Instead of a poison, people would see it as a nutrient that would prevent tooth decay.

According to a 2005 work by Donald W. Miller Jr. MD, a cardiac surgeon and professor of surgery at University of Washington, faulty studies proved tooth decay down 50 to 70 percent in children who drank fluoridated water.

Miller said fluoride does prevent cavities by combining with calcium in dental enamel to form fluorapetite, which increases resistance to demineralization. Fluoride inactivates bacteria that damage teeth by interfering with their enzymes, but these effects alone do not prove efficacy, according to Miller.

Fluoride is the only chemical added to water for the purpose of medical treatment, say opponents. As such, fluoridation is unethical, as informed consent is a standard practice for all medication, and given as a key reason that most of Western Europe has ruled against fluoridation. Water fluoridation means forcing people to take medicine regardless of their consent. The dose cannot be controlled as people drink varying amounts of water. People receive additional fluoride through food and beverages. Babies on bottles can get 300 times as much as breastfed babes. Fluoride accumulates in the body. Healthy kidneys excrete only 50 to 60 percent of what is ingested in a day. Kids take up to 80 percent of ingested fluoride into their bones, according to J. Ekstrand in Pediatric Research periodical, 1994. Fluoride may damage the brain, according to the National Research Council

After the Nome Common Council receives the NJUS resolution calling for an end to fluoridation, the ball will be in Council's court. Due to equipment issues, Nome's water supply is not currently fluoridated.

Norton Sound commercial fishing season nears end

The 2011 commercial fishing season in northern Norton Sound was closed by regulation on Aug. 31, and in southern Norton Sound the season will close Sept. 7, reports Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game.

Menard said the Norton Sound commercial salmon catch through Aug. 26 totaled 140 kings, 318 sockeyes, 109,908 chums, 7,119 pinks and 54,187 silvers by 105 permit holders. "The silver run has been average in southern Norton Sound, but has been below average in northern Norton Sound," he noted.

"...In the Nome Subdistrict, coho [silver] salmon escapements are below average and the Nome River weir count of 540 coho salmon trails all years, except those years when a closure to the coho salmon fishery occurred," reported Menard in an Aug. 25 press release. "The Snake River weir count of 102 coho salmon also trails all years, except those years that coho salmon fishing was closed."

Menard explained the coho run in the district is not sufficient to reach escapement needs and support a coho salmon harvest. He announced the closure effective Aug. 27 of subsistence salmon fishing for coho in the marine and fresh waters of the Nome Subdistrict, closure of all sport fishing for coho, and closure of all subsistence net fishing in the marine waters from Topkok Head to Cape Rodney. He also said the last subsistence set gillnet fishing period in the fresh waters of the Nome Subdistrict would close on Aug. 27.

"...Although hook and line subsistence fishing will still be open, permit holders cannot target coho salmon," the press release stated. "Likewise, sport fishermen cannot target coho salmon even for catch and release. Also, no bait can be used when sport fishing, or hook and line subsistence fishing, in the fresh waters of the Nome Subdistrict."

Port Clarence district

Chum salmon catch limits on the Pilgrim River have been waived, Menard reported in his weekly fisheries update. He said cumulative counts through Aug. 25 at the Pilgrim River weir were 40 kings, 39,911 chums, 3,348 pinks, 8,423 sockeyes and 101 silvers. The weir is operated by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. with assistance from ADF&G.

Kotzebue district

Commercial chum salmon fishing continues in the Kotzebue district.

"The main runway scheduled closure did not occur [last] week, but with limited plane availability the buyer was reluctant to increase fishing hours because of capacity concerns," Menard reports. "Periods [last] week ranged from 3 to 5 hours. The cumulative harvest is slightly over 253,000 chum salmon by 90 permit holders. The number of permits fished and the catch is the highest since 1995 for this date." Menard said runway closures at Kotzebue are scheduled periodically through early September, but it may be possible for fishermen to beat last year's harvest of 270,000 chum salmon in the district

Construction project completions delayed by rainy summer

By Diana Haecker

With a week of mostly dry and sunny weather, construction projects in Nome were making progress after the wet summer season has caused delays in construction work.

In town, Nome Joint Utilities are working on water and sewer upgrades between Steadman St. and G Street. NJUS Manager John Handeland said that old water and sewer pipes that were installed in the 1980s are being replaced with new pipes that are protected by a corrugated steel jacket to better protect the pipe from collapsing when ground conditions change. The rainy summer slowed things down, Handeland

The NJUS completed and commissioned a dedicated power line directly from the power plant to the new hospital. During the conversion of bringing the new hospital online. part of town suffered a power outage on Monday last week. The sewer and water lines to the hospital have been laid, and the hospital is working on connecting their end of the water and sewer system.

The Nome Eskimo Community has this year initiated the improvements of four roads in town: C Street, parts of D Street, Warren Place from Airport Pizza to D Street and Fourth Avenue from Bering Street to Steadman Avenue. The NEC's Transportation Director Bruce Klein said that the streets were put on the state's inventory list for improvements, but thanks to the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, NEC obtained $1 million to fix the roads. Twin Peaks Construction has been doing the work. They put on a new base and added six inches of recycled asphalt pavement. Twin Peaks also finished paving K Street with asphalt and overlaid Fifth Avenue with another layer of asphalt.

While Nome is still awaiting a final plan of the runway improvements to be done at the Nome airport, Kotzebue's Ralph Wien Airport is currently under construction and repair. The Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities announced a two day closure on September 6 and 7 of the airport. The closure is due to a delay in paving. The safety improvement project on runway 9/27 started July 9 and caused several closures since then. Work done there includes pavement rehabilitation for the main runway and taxiways and replacement of the runway lighting systems.

Long time superintendent retires from Nome Youth Facility

By Anna Hahn

Robert "Bob" Froehle moved to Nome with his wife Gretchen with the intention to stay only three years and with the promise to serve as superintendent of the Nome Youth Facility. Now, nine and a half years have passed, and Froehle is ready to celebrate his retirement.

"With every promotion you get a little more separated from the kids," explains Froehle. "So the appeal of originally coming out to Nome to be the superintendent was to not only to be the administrator, but also to get the opportunity to work directly with kids.'

Within the system that Froehle had worked in, minors who had habitually committed crimes, who had committed a felony, or had committed a class A misdemeanor may have been placed in the Nome Youth Facility for close watching and a different environment compared to the jails in which convicted adults are confined. The facility located in Nome takes in youth from the city, surrounding villages, and the Kotzebue region.

"I think what I'm most proud of is that routinely detention centers lock kids behind bars, that's just what they do. Since we've opened up our new building six years ago, we've never had a kid behind a locked door," said Froehle.

Within his 29 years of serving in this division, Froehle has come up against difficult situations and cirtinuing to be at the top of my game."

Now that he is retired, as of September 1, Froehle is excited to begin the quiet life. "I've got a son here and a couple of grandchildren now, so that definitely takes some of my time and in my retirement they'll get more of my time," he said. "I love hockey, I'll go four-wheeling in the summer and a little bit of snowmachining in the winter. I'm a regular at the Rec Center, I believe in a daily workout. I'm also very involved with my church and I am on the KNOM Board of Directors. We'll be staying in Nome for a while!"

cumstances, but with his strong will and calm mannerisms he has developed a successful method of dealing with daily struggles.

He said, "What will I do on September 1, my first day of retirement? I probably won't get up at 6:30 in the morning. But that's about as far as I've planned."

up a vast majority of space, and 18 mechanics doing routine checkups on aircraft. The new extension to the north of the old hanger measures out to be 100 by 60 feet and will allow the old hanger to bear three to four more planes at one time.

As the airline expands their fleet and obtains more complex and larger planes, Koelsch is forced to order more parts. This has resulted in a lack of storage space for their spare parts and tools.

"That's one of our other issues, we have parts stored all over the hangar. We have a variety of aircrafts and they all take different parts. Keeping them all segregated and in their proper place is a constant battle," says Koelsch. The new addition will let the maintenance department store all of their parts in one area and will allow them better access.

"In the maintenance department I don't have a budget. So if we need a part, we get it," explain Koelsch. "The owner, Jim Rowe, has made that clear. He's said, 'I don't want safety to be in question because we're trying to make a junk part work.' If we need a part, we get it." This safety precaution has also contributed to their lack of space.

In the new building, all of the cargo will be stored on the lower level and the upstairs, which is about half the size, will be for storing and organizing parts.

Now that their cargo will be stored in a separate yet attached building, Bering Air will be able to bring their grounded fleet inside in the evenings instead of rotating planes in and out as they work between them. This will allow the regional business to save on energy and time.

In addition to their new storage unit, they will also be adding a new freight office which customers will have access to. This project is slated to be completed by November of this year. On top of this undertaking, the airline is also planning to remodel and expand their lobby as well as their upstairs offices. This second project is expected to be finished within a year.

Concluding, Koelsch added, "We look at it like a family here, when you outgrow your house you either add on or move to a bigger house, so we're just adding on to make a little more room."

The Dock Walk

Harbormaster Joy Baker reports the activities at the Nome Port in the past week:

The weather was cooperative for the most part for people to work outdoors. There was a lot of gravel hauling and moving containers taking place as one mainline barge offloaded cargo at the port and departed southbound. Two more gravel barges took gravel to Alakanuk and one barge took gravel to Kotzebue. Two landing craft made three trips with village cargo. The landing craft Seahawk went to Little Diomede and delivered cargo twice.

The NOAA research ship Bristol Explorer called on the port of Nome, southbound, but it is slated to come back north to the Bering Strait. Two more landing craft arrived throughout the weekend to load up cargo for the villages. Although the port is busy as ever and not winding down yet, the deadline to put cargo on the mainline barges is coming up next week. There are also still several fuel barges scheduled to arrive in Nome to top off the fuel tanks before winter.

Last Saturday, the Nome-Beltz High School cross country team held its annual home meet of the season at the Nome-Beltz High School. With teams from both Kotzebue and Teller joining the Nome Nanooks at the meet, the Nome team finished with a strong showing in both the boys and girls varsity races.

In the first event of the meet, the girls varsity race, the Nanooks captured the top three places. Rosa Schmidt, the winner of the race for the Nanooks came in with a time of 23 minutes and one second. Behind her were Hannah Tozier with a time of 25 minutes and 11 seconds and Caitlin Tozier with a time of 26 minutes and 38 seconds. However, even with these great results by the Nanooks, they were unable to win the girls event because they did not have enough racers to qualify. The race is scored by the top five total places of finish and the lowest total score wins. However, the Nome girls only raced four runners and so came up one runner short to qualify.

In the next race, the boy's varsity, the Nanooks competed hard as well, but fell just short to Kotzebue, losing 28-27 in total score. However, there were some incredible individual achievements. One came with Tim Schmidt, who won the boys race for the Nanooks with a time of 20 minutes and 17 seconds, winning the race by 17 seconds over Sam Atkinson from Kotzebue. Nome also finished in fifth, sixth and seventh place in the race with runs by Junyor Erickson, Jens Irelan and Nick Morgan.

Even with the strong results brought in by the team this weekend, some of the runners still want to improve their marks over the season.

'I'm hoping to break 19 minutes and then 18 minutes and then 17 minutes," said Schmidt. "I mainly just want to get faster throughout the year.'

This improvement that Schmidt wants for himself throughout the year is something that the coaches feel is coming as well.

I really think that seeing these results in only midseason shows that we are going to have a really successful season," says Kevin Busk, one of the two Nome-Beltz High School cross country coaches.

It was also clear that with so many high finishes by both the girls and boys teams, it seemed that each teammate encouraged each other strongly. Coach Busk says that each individual runner really motivates themselves strongly.

"They approach every race that this is going to be the best race that they can possibly race. I tell all my athletes to leave everything out there and have no regrets," said Busk.

The next race for the Nanooks will be in two weeks in Kotzebue, which is a preview for the regional meet later in the season.

Nome gardens: No longer our best kept secret

LOCAL

By Nancy McGuire

The Annual Nome Garden Tour got underway Sunday afternoon. Nome gardeners and lovers of gardens boarded one of Morgan Enterprise's school busses to make the rounds of the backyard greenhouses and secret gardens tucked away in Nome. The annual event is organized by master gardener Cheryl Thompson and friends.

With Arnie Ashenfelter at the wheel the bus was rolling with its first stop at the new Community Center Garden's greenhouse next to the Food Bank (funded by Arctic Access).

Karen Olanna's artistic arrangement of flowers and vegetables, including fantastic green peas and Peggy Fagerstrom's boatload of flowers were next on the trip along with Gale Hagemeyer's colorful blooming flowerpots. Rudy Ojanen's container gardens and greenhouse illustrate how to make the most of limited space. Cussy Kauer's poppies and Leslie Smith's garden were filled with colorful beauty. Tuesona Tungwenuk's green thumbs were evident in her gardening touch. Loretta Bullard's flowers were striking. Dan and Abby Bachelder's greenhouse was filled with the earthy aroma of juicy tomatoes and crispy peppers, while Sister Damien of the Little Sisters of Jesus had a new green house (funded by Arctic Access) with vegetables and many containers filled with colorful petunias, lupines and pansies.

The bus trundled on to Icy View and the restful backyard gardens of Angela Hansen whose artistic ceramics added fantasy to the floral beauty, and Roxan Thurman's amazing gardening skill and drip irrigation system left folks in awe.

The bus hit the highway and traveled over the Dexter Pass to Donna Morgan's camp. The spicy aroma of petunias in full glory in Donna's sunroom did wonders for relaxation and enjoyment as garden tourists inhaled deeply and went across the emerald green lawn to the greenhouse that was filled with a bounty of vegetables. Some folks took time to pull up a chair on the lawn and enjoy the

The bus tour headed back in the direction of town with a quick stop at Tony Shelp's greenhouse that was packed with vegetables that were growing to the beat of jazz and bluegrass tunes.

By this time gardeners were getting hungry and the final stop was at the Thompson home and gardens where Roger Thompson had prepared a fine smoked salmon and all the trimmings. There were quiche, casseroles, deserts and salad grown in the community garden at Nome Beltz High School. Folks sat outside in the warmth of the sun and ate good food, enjoyed pleasant company, fresh air and the golden tundra and went home anticipating next year's gardens.

Alzheimer's disease: A self-test

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

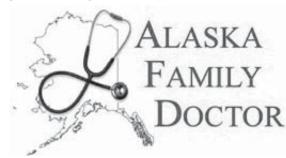

A self-administered screening test may give patients the ability to recognize the signs of Alzheimer's disease in its earliest stages.

The test, called Self-Administered Gerocognitive Examination was developed in 2010 by researchers from the Ohio State University department of medicine.

The test takes 10-15 minutes for most people and can be downloaded from the Ohio State University website: www.sagetest.osu.edu.

The exam is designed to be taken without preparation or assistance, so I will avoid printing any of the actual questions here. In general, the questions test a person's ability to identify time, perform simple math, recognize common objects, draw simple figures, and remember basic tasks. The brain's ability to perform these functions is impaired in Alzheimer's dementia.

Alzheimer's dementia is a feared diagnosis for many people. There is no known cure, there are few treatments, and despite more than 100 years of research, the cause of this debilitating disease remains unknown.

Alzheimer's disease begins as a mild problem with short-term memory, word finding, or planning complex tasks like shopping for groceries or balancing a checkbook. Over several years a person with the disease will become unable to recognize people they should know well, and in the end stages they become unable to feed or care for themselves.

No research has identified a single cause of the disease. Smoking, obesity, diabetes mellitus, advancing age, and having a close familymember with Alzheimer's dementia are all risk factors. Most experts believe that several factors occurring together lead to a domino effect in the brain where neurons become clogged with proteins eventually leading to the death of brain cells.

Even though there is no known cure for Alzheimer's, there are treatments and activities that may slow the development of serious impairment. Identifying the disease in its earliest stages allows time to implement these treatments. This gives patients and their families a greater amount of time in preparing for the challenges of the disease in its later stages.

Researchers say that SAGE can identify about 80% of people who show mild signs of thinking or memory impairment, while 95% of people with no signs of dementia will achieve normal scores on the exam. In research terms, these are good numbers. This means that a test like SAGE, taken in the privacy of a person's home, may be a valuable tool for identifying early signs of dementia.

Researchers are quick to point out that the SAGE tool is for screening purposes only. Many illnesses have the same early symptoms as Alzheimer's disease, and SAGE cannot diagnose Alzheimer's or other forms of dementia. The test is not intended to replace more extensive, and more accurate testing by medical professionals. People who score low on the test are recommended to seek further evaluation from their physician.

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor Mel Matthews, Nome Seventh-day Adventist Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

I've spent many years in Western Alaska, six years as a National Guard officer in Kotzebue. I moved to Nome for four years, and then again to Kotzebue as the Administrator of Community Health for Maniilaq Association. I moved back to Nome three years ago as a Pastor.

I've had several close friends who no longer live because they took their own life or attempted to take their own life. During my first seven years in Bush Alaska, I also spent a lot of time in the bars and I drank a lot. I told someone recently that since I first came to Western Alaska 30 years ago, it seems that not a lot has changed. In regard to suicide and attempted suicide, nothing seems any different now than 30 years ago. Why is that?

Many behavioral health professionals, many elders, many concerned family members have spent their time and dedicated energy working toward solutions to what I believe is our most serious social problem, and that is a blessing. Of course, we also know what accelerates this problem the most is alcohol. Our problems can feel like a fire, a fire that is burning a hole in our soul, but alcohol is like pouring gasoline on that fire.

I'm not any smarter than the mental health professionals, elders, or family members, but I want to share some personal insight. Some of the insight is through life's experience such as my experience as a combat soldier in Vietnam and dealing with my veteran friends in regard to PTSD from the war and yes, much of it comes from being a pastor and dealing with people spiritually.

The most important insight that I have gained is the spiritual experience that happened when I gave my life to Jesus Christ. I'm so far from being like my savior, but I now understand that Jesus, the son of God, came to this world and gave his life for me and now I want to live for him. I've finally come to understand that living in this world is not just about me. Jesus came and lived his life for others, he loved each person. He cared for them and was concerned about their lives. He has promised us eternal life with him. Because of his love for us, he wants us to have a better life right here in Western Alaska. In the Holy Scripture, John 10:10, Jesus refers to himself as the Good Shepherd and says, "I came so that they could have life—indeed, so that they could live life to the fullest." I believe that is his desire for each one of you.

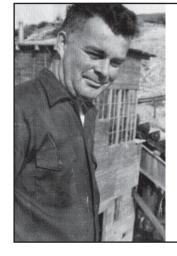

Ask Jesus to give you strength to make it through the hard times, the difficult moments. Ask him to give you strength to give up the alcohol. Ask Jesus to give you strength to be like him and live for others.

Dear Editor.

Well another school year has stated in the region and I begin to wonder how many more youth are staying home after graduating this last spring instead of pursuing any kind of higher education. These last several years I have witnessed so many individuals with potential not even leaving their own hometowns—not even trying to go for one semester at college, one year at a trade school or one week of any kind of training for a more quality kind of job that pays better than a job at their local stores.

I've had a few years of college experience and I'd like all those who haven't gone to at least try one semester. I'm not sure if your teachers have ever told you any stories of when they were in college, but believe me when I say that it was probably some of their best times of their lives. For me, I couldn't believe all the different kinds of characters, stories and people I've met and experienced while away at college! I treasure them the rest of my life and one of these days I'll go back and finish my degree.

So I challenge all of you younger adults to try and get out to further your education before your life passes you by. I know if you do, you won't regret it and will have endless stories for a lifetime.

It is my understanding that Pat

Sincerely, Melvin Towarak Unalakleet, AK 99684

Dear Editor:

Callahan was recently not retained Activities Director for Nome/Beltz High School. It is also my understanding that he was not retained because of complaints regarding the way visiting teams were treated while in Nome. For the record, let me state all Bethel teams have very much enjoyed the hospitality while in Nome. My teams have returned home thankful for the food, a chance to swim in the pool and transportation to and from the airport. In fact, Pat has often gone out of his way to help. Just last year, I had a junior high volleyball player leave a pair of shoes in the dorm room. I called Pat Monday morning and he had the shoes in the mail to me by the end of the day. While that may not sound like a big deal, the student, her parents and I appreciated the effort.

Having worked with Pat as a fellow AD for many years, I got to know him pretty well. I have found Pat very easy to work with and a man of his word. Bethel and Nome have a long history of competition "on the court" which I'm sure will continue when Pat and I are distant memories. However, if I were in Nome I would be very concerned about who will take over this position. Good luck with finding someone who is willing to work Friday and Saturday nights, then turn around and help out with transportation on Sunday. Someone who knows how to schedule quality games, arrange air travel, feed stranded teams and all the other tasks it takes to run activities in rural Alaska. Nome had such a man in Pat, and in my professional opinion is making a huge mistake in not retaining him. Hopefully, this error can be corrected, as the truth about Pat's job performance becomes better known.

Billy Strickland, Dean of Students/AD Bethel Regional High School ASAA Region 1 Chairperson ASAA Board President

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter in support of Pat Callahan being retained as the Athletic Director. Last season Houston High School and my boys' basketball team came to Nome for their annual basketball tournament. We were met immediately by Pat at the airport and shuttled to the dorms. From the second we landed to the second we left, we were treated with warmth and respect. The experience we had rivaled any tournament I had ever been to. Our kids had a great experience and continue to talk about how much fun they had on that particular trip.

I completely attribute our experience to Pat and his love and dedication to kids and his community. He went above and beyond to make us feel welcomed and appreciated. When we needed something he was gracious and helped us immediately. When we left he personally escorted us to the airport. I believe you already have the right person for the job that represents your community and your school in a way that any community in Alaska would be proud!

Sincerely, David K. Porter Head Boys' Basketball Coach Houston High School

Dear Editor

I recently heard of the decision by the school board to not renew Patrick Callahan's contract as the athletic director at NBHS and would like to publicly thank him for his work. I've worked with Pat as the Junior High volleyball coach, a girls basketball team chaperone, with the Nome Nanook Booster Club, through my work at the hospital and as a high school volleyball coach at NBHS. Regardless of in what capacity I worked with him, he proved to be dedicated and worked hard to ensure all students had as much opportunity as possible.

It's my understanding that supposedly there may have been complaints that he does not support girls sports, which I highly disagree with. I worked with Pat for five years in girls sports and never felt that he wasn't being fair or working to provide the best opportunities for the students as possible. I always appreciated Pat's willingness to ensure that I had what I needed as a coach (especially in my first few years as the Junior High volleyball coach and when I started coaching high school), his dedication to student activities, and the fact that he was always available and open to ideas. He provided guidance, support and feedback that helped the programs I worked in to grow. In the various duties he provided as the athletic director, I don't remember any time things didn't run smoothly or, if needed, get fixed as quickly as pos-

Norton Sound Health Corporation Request for Qualifications

Project: Norton Sound Replacement Hospital Deadline for Qualification Entries: 9/28/2011

I. Solicitation

Norton Sound Health Corporation. (NSHC) is soliciting qualifications from artists to commission three pieces of art for the Nome replacement hospital project. Qualifications may consist of photographs of previous work, a resume, or any other two dimensional material which accurately illustrates the artist's style, including preferred mediums.

II. Background and Project Summary

Norton Sound Health Corporation operates an existing 18 bed secondary care hospital serving the entire Norton Sound region. The Indian Health Service (IHS) determined the existing hospital facility is beyond its useful life and in need of replacement. Final planning documents for a new replacement hospital were approved by IHS in 2006 and construction is now underway. The new hospital is on the east side of Nome, approximately two miles from the existing facility. Inpatient, outpatient, and variety of support services will move to the new hospital. Construction will be complete in late 2012.

The project budget includes $533,000 for art in the new hospital. Working with the project architect, Kumin and Associates, Inc., (KAI), the NSHC art committee has identified locations for art throughout the facility. Art will consist of transferred pieces from the existing facility, donated work, purchased art from the local community, and commissioned art. This RFQ process is only for the commissioned work.

Listed below are the three areas in the building where commissioned work will be located:

- 1. The first location is above the ground level lobby. An open atrium spanning to the underside of level two offers an idyllic location for a hanging piece. Additional support steel will be installed above the ceiling to increase configuration options.
- 2. The second location is on the North wall of the first floor shared waiting. Three adjacent open walls separated by doorways provide approximately 650 square feet of surface area for customized artwork. Above ceiling electrical J-boxes have been installed to facilitate the addition of accent lighting as needed.
- 3. The third location is on the North wall of the second floor shared waiting in front of the cafeteria. This area provides approximately 300 square feet of highly visible wall space. Above ceiling electrical J-boxes have been installed to facilitate the addition of accent lighting as needed.

III. Selection Process

Submitted qualifications will be reviewed by the NSHC art committee to determine a list of finalists. Those artists selected as finalists, will receive written direction to submit a specific proposal outlining their design concept. Finalists will have 1 month to develop proposals. The NSHC art committee will review the proposals and select three commissioned pieces. Formal contracts will be awarded to the artists within 30 days following selection. Reference paragraph XI of this RFQ for timeline with specific dates.

IV. Selection Criteria

Artists will be selected to develop proposals based on:

- 1. Artistic Merit as evidenced by representation of relevant past work.
- 2. Appropriateness of the artist's medium, style and previous experience in relation to the project goals and setting.

V. Submittals

To be considered, offerors must deliver qualifications to the address below, on or before the deadline, and in the number of copies indicated below. This is not a postmark deadline.

Deadline: Qualifications will be accepted until Thursday, September 28th, 2011 at 4:00 PM.

VI. Courtesy Project Tour

There will be a courtesy hard-hat tour of the project on Wednesday September 16th at 2:00PM. The tour will be through an active construction site; appropriate clothing, including closed-toe foot wear, will be required. Hard hats and safety vests will be provided. The tour group will convene in front of the owner's trailer at 1:50 PM. If you plan to attend the tour, notify Michelle Woods at the project office (907) 443-6769. Tour participation is NOT required to submit qualifications.

VII. Theme

The design team and NSHC board envision a facility housing native art reflective of the entire Norton Sound region. The goal is a body of work which highlights the unique traits of each native subculture, but collectively represents the Norton Sound region as a whole.

VIII. History

The new Norton Sound Regional Hospital, in Nome, is located in the Bering Strait region service area. The Bering Strait region is located on the southern coast of the Seward Peninsula in northwest Alaska, 539 air miles Northwest of Anchorage. The region is home to three distinct cultural groups of Eskimo people with the majority of people living in the traditional Inupiat villages of Shishmaref, Diomede, Brevig Mission, Mary's Igloo, Teller, King Island, Solomon, Council, White Mountain, Golovin, Elim, Koyuk, Shaktoolik, and Unalakleet. The St. Lawrence Island Yupik people live in Gambell and Savoonga and have a distinct culture and dialect referred to as Siberian Yupik. The communities of Golovin and Elim are traditionally Unaliq, which is a branch of Central Yup'ik. Stebbins and St. Michael are Central Yup'ik. There are many other distinctions in the region: All but 1 village, White Mountain, are coastal communities; three of the villages are island communities with distinct island hunting and gathering culture. The Yupik people of St. Lawrence Island have the only Eskimo society that is known to be clan based. The villages of Diomede, Gambell, and Savoonga have direct ties to relatives in the Russian Far East.

IX. Other Requirements

There are no restrictions on style of work or materials, but the work must be sturdy and durable with minimal routine maintenance required. This is a seismic occupancy category 4 area, suspended work must confirm to the IBC 2006 building code.

Land Acquisition for Richard Foster Building REQUEST FOR PROPOSAL (RFP)

Date of Issue: August 15, 2011 Date Proposal is Due: September 30, 2011

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The City of Nome is seeking proposals from a landowner or a conglomerate of landowners in Nome who are interested in selling property to the City for construction of the new Richard Foster Building. Specifically, the City is interested in lot and block configurations that would accommodate space and parking for a 17,000 square foot facility. While a Front Street property is desired, it is not required.

The City is asking prospective landowners to submit sufficient information regarding the property to enable the City to select a short list of finalists who will be considered for their respective sites. All property that has a clear title and is current on property tax payments is eligible for participation. This will be a competitive negotiation process. The City of Nome reserves the right to reject all proposals and issue another Request For Proposal (RFP). This RFP does not commit the City of Nome to reimburse property owners for proposal submission costs.

2.0 GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF INFORMATION

The information shall include name of landowner(s), a legal description of the property and a statement on why the property is an ideal location for the new Richard Foster Building, which will house the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum. The deadline to provide requested information is September 30, 2011.

sible. Of all the places I went to, in all the tournaments I participated in or witnessed, Nome always had very well run programs. I never had anything to complain about, nor did I ever hear of other coaches complaining when they went to Nome. For the most part, other coaches and parents mainly complimented and said good things about how things were organized. I have also heard other coaches who don't have supportive, hard-working ADs and know that Nome was very blessed to have someone as dedicated as he is.

Thank you, Pat, for all you have done for NBHS student activities and athletics. It was an honor to work with you.

Dear Editor:

I heard the remarks on KNOM that were made in "public" about Pat basically not addressing the needs of "Girl" programs and "Visitors" to schools for sporting events. As a previous coach and visitor to NBHS, I find these to be untrue. I wanted to address these comments as a previous girls basketball coach working under Mr. Callahan's basketball program and as a coach of BRHS girls basketball program who visited last year.

When I was the coach of the girls basketball program, Pat Callahan personally sat me down, explained the budget, sports travel, and different details I needed to do to get the program started. Pat also asked me what type of teams I would like to play during the season, and he made this happen. He added the Elks tournament in Valdez and then scheduled Hooper Bay to come in and play two extra endowment games. Throughout the course of the season, Mr. Callahan would have his boys teams at the gym supporting the girls, even at 8 a.m. games when the boys didn't play, and at the Regional and State Tournament, he was a major supporter.

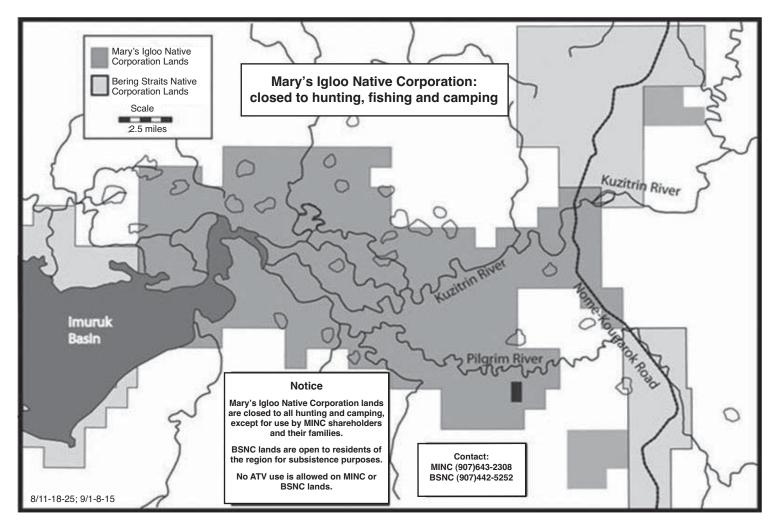

At the end of the season, Mr. Callahan sat down with me, we discussed summer plans, fundraising for the next year and the awards banquet. We spoke about what type of schedule I would like to see the girls have for the 2010-2011 school year. He was able to use his credibility with other ADs to get the team into challenging tournaments I wanted to be in that were highly rated and are attended by very successful basketball programs, hence the Dimond Lady Lynx Basketball Tournament. Also, there was never a time that I would have to worry about travel arrangements. Mr. Callahan would have the arrangements made ahead of time and for the cheapest price. He was very competent in this area, and this reduced fundraising.

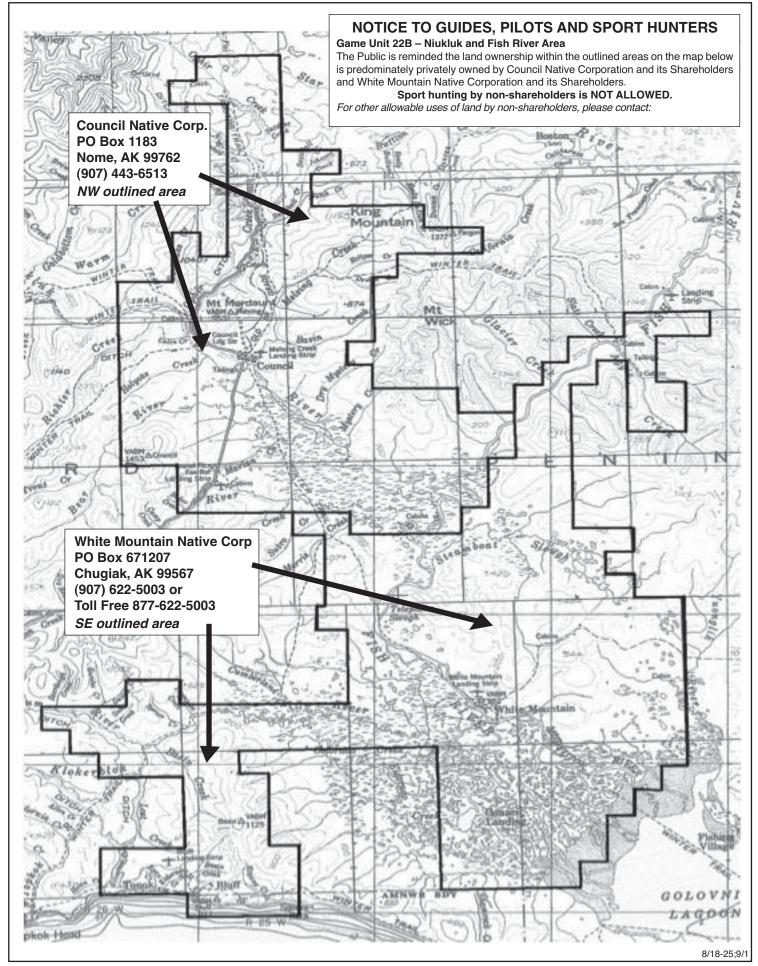

Last year, I was the girls basketball coach at Bethel Regional High School and we attended the Subway Showdown in Nome. When we arrived in Nome we were greeted by Ardy Potter, who Pat sent to pick us up. When we arrived at the school, the classroom assignments for lodging were assigned, meals were covered, and we had access to various other pieces of equipment we needed.

Mr. Callahan also scheduled a bus to take the teams to town to go to the store and also to tour the town of Nome. Our game schedule ran with no problems, and we were made aware of possible delays in game starts and the reasons why. The biggest thing that I saw from Mr. Callahan that sets him apart from many athletic directors is that he spends large amount of time at the school from 7 a.m. till 11:30 p.m. He made sure every team was taken care of before he left for the night. Also, we had the cell phone numbers of Mr. Callahan if we needed things in the middle of the night.

I can say from personal experience of traveling around the state that no one from Dillingham, Hooper Bay, Unalaska, Kotzebue, Barrow, Valdez, ACS, and the road system shows the hospitality that Mr. Callahan sets up. Usually we have to rent vans or walk to get places throughout the day, and we are given a schedule and do not interact with the AD again unless there is a prob-

As the previous assistant principal of NBHS and the current assistant principal of BRHS, I have always felt very confident at the outstanding service that Mr. Callahan offers all sports teams at NBHS and the hospitality that is offered with our visiting teams from BRHS. Mr. Callahan put in relentless hours for all activities both academic and athletic. The stipend he receives for being activities director comes out to a below minimum wage hourly salary when compared to the number of hours he puts in on a normal basis. When teams are stuck in Nome due to weather, for example the 2008-2009 Regional Basketball tournament, Mr. Callahan spent extra hours of uncompensated pay to ensure all the teams were taken care of. This also includes being at the school on Sunday to shuttle students and coaches to and from the airport.

At BRHS, we have an Activities Director who sets up game schedules and maintains the logistics associated with activities, separate people who watch the gym, and a separate person who sets up travel for all activities. Neither of these people at BRHS teach on top of their other duties. In the Lower 48, the Activities Directors make 7-8 times the amount of money that Mr. Callahan is given as an Activities Director to do the same position and only have that position as their job title. The low pay, outstanding service, and performing multiple jobs of the AD by Mr. Callahan has proven that he is very capable and dedicated activities director.

I feel the impact of not offering Mr. Callahan an activities director contract will ruin relationships between schools that he has established and air travel organizations as other charters might be used from place to place. I believe this has been seen at last weekend's cross-country meet and volleyball competition. The cross-country meet only had Nome, Kotz, and a few students from Teller participating. This event used to be swarmed with many teams from around rural Alaska. Since not offering Mr. Callahan a contract, the NBHS volleyball team suffered by not being able to play at a high class tournament against a number of competitive teams in Chugiak. These acts have proven that the students of Nome have already started to suffer by not having a competent activities director since school board actions in June.

Ms. Barb Amarok also stated there were 10 complaints about Pat Callahan. My question is how could Mr. Callahan receive superior recommendations from the NBHS principal and past and current superintendent? It is the duty of the school board to express these concerns to the superintendent through the board chair, and I would greatly encourage Ms. Amarok to express these concerns rather than keeping them a secret. The past board minutes from at least 2008-2009 to present have not addressed any concerns regarding Mr. Callahan's performance. I highly doubt there were any complaints before my time at NPS.

The service of Mr. Callahan as AD has gained him the reputation of excontinued on page 18

The smaller, outcry tracts will be auctioned first, followed immediately by opening of the sealed bids. Sealed bids must be received at the above address no later than 5:00 PM, Monday, September 26, 2011. Late bids may be submitted in Nome immediately prior to the auction. The DNR will record the top three bids for each outcry tract. The winning bidder must submit the minimum bid amount and an Outcry Bid Form at the auction. Payment must be in cash, by a cashier's or certified check (not a personal check), or by money order. Checks must be made payable to the Alaska Department of Natural Resources. In the event that the winning bidder does not complete the purchase of the lease, it will be offered to the second and third high bidders in turn. A similar procedure will be followed for sealed bid tracts. All sealed bids must be submitted on the Bid Form provided by the DNR. For all lease tracts the winning bidder must, within 30 days after the sale, transfer funds in the amount of the balance of the cash bonus and the first year annual rental to the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, and submit two fully executed copies of the lease form. The minimum bid for all lease tracts is one year's rental, at $.88/acre. If a successful bidder fails to comply with these requirements, the amount deposited with his bid is forfeited to the state.

Under 11 AAC 82.450 the commissioner will, in his discretion, reject any or all bids on any tract or tracts. Although the minimum bid for all tracts is set at one year's rental, the Department may choose to reject bids on tracts the Department believes are more valuable than the highest bid.

Under 11 AAC 82.435 each bidder at the sale must also provide a statement of their qualifications to acquire and hold mineral rights in the State of Alaska, and notice of any joint bids. Complete information concerning the Statement of Qualifications, Bid Forms, and joint bids can be found online (See above) or from the contact information given above.

All leases will be for a primary term of 10 years, and may be extended afterward for so long as production continues. Production must be achieved by the end of the primary term in order to be extended (11 AAC 86.575). All leases will be subject to annual rental payments specified at AS 38.05.211 and 11 AAC 86.541, and the production royalty under AS 38.05.212. More specific terms and conditions will be specified in the leases, and in mining permits issued by the State and other government agencies. Bonding may be required for some mining operations.

Lease sizes vary, with the smallest near the shore in shallow water, and the larger tracts farther offshore in deeper water. The intent of the small (160 acres or less), near shore leases is to afford small miners an opportunity to own and operate a lease (See Final Finding and Decision: Nome Offshore Lease Sale for Locatable Minerals). The DNR believes that a vibrant small mining community is in the best interest of the State. The DNR will consider 11 AAC 86.815 and 11 AAC 82.605 in determining approval of assignments of interest and operator agreements.

Doug Boyer Assistant Site Administrator Bethel Regional High School Dear Editor:

No problems for us, that's for sure. Always first class transportation to and from the airport, (I even helped drive one year.) plenty of food, leftovers, even. The folks in the kitchen are awesome, maybe a little tight on their schedule sometimes, but we always had food for the teams. Pat Callahan juggled schedules to fit weather and team needs and provided rides to town. You've done well adjusting to the fact that you can't use the dorms anymore due to NACTEC, and such. I repeat, the food, which is most important, was always plentiful, all you want. My kids always were happy with it, and brought home first place every time because they were well fed.

We went to a school last year and never got fed for two days. Now that would be something to complain about, but we didn't. I'm still waiting for a sound complaint that holds water. Just keep training those championship teams, and I know first hand that AD is a busy job, and anyone who does it should be given a thank you, not a tough time.

In Shishmaref, it was always thank you.

Funny how just a couple people in a bigger town such as Nome give the whole town a bad name.

When we went to Nome, in the mid to late 90s, the crowd was horrible to our team. One big fat man up on the balcony taunted all my ball players, even when we were behind by 20. That doesn't happen any more. Thank you. John Hersrud Noorvik

GOLD GONE-A floating gold dredge belonging to "Miner Mike" Benchoff and associates went bottom up the evening of Aug. 31 a few yards from the Subway restaurant. Ambulance and firefighter units waited at the small boat harbor for rescuers to deliver the two diving employees who arrived wet, cold, but unscathed, needing no further assistance, according to ambulance crew. Benchoff said Sunday he thought that a wave washed over the dredge while the crew had the hatch off and were pumping out one cell, causing the rig to capsize. The accident lined up spectators with binoculars and cameras looking seaward at every parking lot on Front Street as Shawn Pomrenke aboard his dredge attempted to salvage Benchoff's dredge. 'Maybe he found too much heavy gold," Sidewalk Supt. Joe Kunnuk said. Indeed, Benchoff said the incident dumped about 30 oz. of gold into the water and that the rescue process rendered the dredge useless for this season.

Dreams come true: Wien Building is coming down

By Sandra L. Medearis

All the buildings on the proposed abatement list remained on the fixup-or demolish list after Nome Common Council's formal abatement hearing Aug. 31 except one. Owners of 10 or so buildings deemed to post public nuisance issues, health or safety risks appeared at the meeting in person or by letter and gave various explanations of remedies in process. Vandals had afflicted some of the buildings, they said, and they would clean them up again.

The next step, according to the City's ordinance will be to declare the properties targeted for abatement at the next regular Council meeting Sept. 12, from which time owners will have 30 days to fix or tear down the shacks: otherwise the City will demolish the buildings and bill the owners for the work.

The Council directed the owners to nail up windows and doors against marauders and mischief-bent children, pick up trash, and square away properties by meeting with the City's building inspector, Allen Maxwell, if they want to keep the eyesores standing for eventual restoration.

No problem, Pat Hahn said. Attending the meeting with Bill Boucher, one of three owners of the Front Street anchor monstrosity, the Wien Building across from City Hall, Pat Hahn pleased the ears of many when he said the Wien Building was coming down. He and owners had gone through the building and determined it to be in worse shape than they thought, with a rotten foundation and not likely to survive a move to another address, Hahn said

One small building on West D Street dropped from the list after Jay Wieler explained that the structure across the street from his house was used for cold storage, was secured from trespass and had new siding on the north side. That improvement appeared to be worth $1,000, according to his tax statement, Wieler said.

City Manager Josie Bahnke remarked that owners might have already had enough forbearance from the City's ordinance; some buildings had been slated for abatement two or three times previously. Councilman Stan Andersen asked for that information to be added to the list for the

Road to Nome along Yukon River finds favor

By Sandra L. Medearis

More people want a way to drive between points from Fairbanks to Nome than not, and they want to follow the Yukon River a good

Just after the first of last year, the Alaska

Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities published a study evaluating corridor options connecting Fairbanks area to Nome. The report presented four route alternatives and selected one over the others, based on economic benefits, costs, land management, environmental restraints and terrain.

The favored route, dubbed the Yukon River Corridor, would start near Manley Hot Springs and run 500 miles westward through tundra, mountains and forests along the north side of the Yukon River to join the isolated Nome road system near Council.

After meeting with 31 agencies and community groups in Western Alaska, tacking up the maps on walls and unfurling them on tables along with slide presentations and question and

Second dog dies in musk ox attack

By Diana Haecker

A German Shepard dog named Dozer was the second dog this summer that died after being gored by a musk ox. The four-year old dog was tied up outside the trailer home of his owner Jennifer Russell at the State Trailers, uphill from the Postal Annex west of Port Road.

Russell reported that a herd of 13 musk oxen had been hanging out around there for weeks. "They've been in our backyard, the dog was barking at them and then suddenly one huge bull charged toward the dog," she said. When she heard the commotion she came out of the house and saw the musk ox charging the chained up dog.

Her three little children saw the attack as well. "He flung my dog into the air and finally backed away when we threw big rocks at him and yelled at him," Russell said. The musk oxen finally wandered off and Russell took the dog to veterinarian Dr. Derrick Leedy. The dog lived through an operation but then died of his injuries the next morning.

Russell notified the State wildlife trooper and the Alaska Department of Fish and Game. She reports that they managed to drive the herd away from the State trailers for now.

In response to the increasing incidents of musk oxen attacking dogs and getting alarmingly close to human dwellings, the City Council has set up a work session with ADF&G biologist Tony Gorn on Tuesday, September 6.

Letters ·

Dear Nancy and Nome residents,

We are all very lucky because we live in a place where there is very little serious crime. Most Nome residents never lock their door or cars.

I am sure there are not many places left, even in Alaska, where people have the same lifestyle and opportunity to live in a safe place.

Of course, if something unusual happens in our community, we all unite like one family and try to help each another.

This is great and hopefully we will continue to unite in bad or good time for our community.

This is just an emotional, philosophical comment, but now I want to bring attention to the letter from Mrs and Mr. Noyakuk that was recently published in The Nome Nugget.

Somebody stole their outboard motor and took from an elderly couple part of their lifestyle- fishing and hunting.

Nome is a small town and I hope sooner or later Nome Police/State Troopers will find who did this.

Meantime, I hope somebody from Nome or local dealers give the Noyakuk couple a chance to temporarily use an extra/spare outboard motor to continue fishing and hunting this

I feel sorry about what happened to Mrs. and Mr. Noyakuk and will support them in some way, if needed. Nikolai A. Ivanoff Nome, Alaska

August cooler and wetter than normal

By Diana Haecker

As the leaves turn colors and fall is in the air, the chapter of summer in this year's weather narrative is closing with the observation that it was cold and wet. The National Weather Service in Nome confirmed that last month was the coolest August in nine years and saw a mean temperature of 48°F, which is 2.1°F colder than

The highest temperature reached 70°F, breaking the 70s barrier for the first time since May, and the lowest temperature was 30°F.

It was not only cooler but also wetter than usual. August saw 4.36 inches of rain, which is the greatest amount of precipitation in any given month since September 2005. The most memorable rainfall came down on August 11 with a torrential 1.21 inches of water falling out of the sky in just one day. With that, August 11 became the wettest day in Nome since August 12, 2004.

The National Weather Service says that this summer is the wettest summer in 13 years with a total of 9.49 inches of rain and tied for the 14th wettest summer on record. The Climate Prediction Center sees a normal September in terms of precipitation in Nome's future but also predicts colder than normal temperatures for the rest of

Since May we have had to put up with the petty micromanagement of the Nome School Board in regard to the position of athletic director. Here it is September and we have no AD. It's hard to understand why certain members of the board are so bitter. Nothing has been done to fill the position and all we hear from the board member who's the hold up is a flimsy excuse blaming the "good ol' boys," whoever they might be— seems no administrator fills the definition. The board made folks laugh when they sanctimoniously counted up the minutes an AD should spend after school doing their job. They seemed to forget the weekends, when most sporting events take place.

If our school district in going to have a sports program, then we need an AD. Someone has to make the arrangements for team travel. Someone has to see that our visiting teams get picked up at the airport. Someone needs to see that our visitors are fed and given proper accommodations. Sporting events don't just happen. It seems our past athletic director was doing an outstanding job. What's the problem? Who are these mysterious phantom complainers a board member speaks of? And what business does the school board have in bringing unsupported personnel issues to a public meeting?

The silly foot-dragging by the board is an embarrassment. They seem to have lost sight of their mission, if there was one. The school board should be looking after the well being of our children. This includes our children who play sports. It also includes the children of visiting communities who come to Nome to participate in sporting events. They are our guests and we need to see that they are cared for as if they were our own children. The athletic director sees that this happens. Board members should act with the professionalism they should have assumed when they took office. -N.L.M.-

NOAA extends public comment period on proposed halibut catch sharing plan

NOAA's National Marine Fisheries Service is extending the comment period for the proposed Halibut Catch Sharing Plan to September 21. The decision to extend the comment period comes at the heels of a visit to Alaska by NOAA administrator Dr. Jane Lubchenco. She and Senator Mark Begich heard concerns and comments. The halibut stock in southeast Alaska and the central Gulf of Alaska has seen a steep decline in the past several years. The proposed catch sharing plan is designed to foster a sustainable fishery by preventing overharvesting of halibut and would introduce provisions that provide flexibility for charter and commercial fishermen.

The Alaska House Special Committee on Fisheries also met last week to hear from state and federal officials and affected fishermen about the contentious plan the North Pacific Fishery Management Council proposed for the Gulf of Alaska halibut fisheries. The Council proposes lowering the charter limit for halibut to one in possession per day with maximum size restrictions, from the current two per day, which concerns charter halibut operators.

Airplane crashes reported in Nightmute, McGrath

In two separate incidents, three small aircraft were involved in accidents this past week. KYUK reports that two single engine airplanes collided midair near Nightmute on Friday. Pilot Scott Veal, 24, of Kenai flew a Cessna for Grant Aviation, Kirsten Sprague, 26, of Idaho flew a Cessna for Ryan Air. Veal's plane went down and burned, killing Veal at the accident scene. Sprague managed an emergency landing on the tundra and survived. The Associated Press reports that the pilots were dating and met in the air en route to Bethel. Aviation investigators told AP that the pilots were in radio communication prior to the crash. Investigators say it's too early to point the crash to pilot error.

In a separate airplane crash on Sunday, a pilot survived but is severely injured. The Anchorage Daily News reports that James Ken Richardson's Super Cub lost power a mile away from McGrath and he tried landing on the tundra. The plane hit the ground and overturned. Richardson suffered a broken neck but is in stable condition at Alaska Regional in Anchorage.

Potato blight is in Alaska

UAF scientists report that the late blight has shown up in the fields of two potato producers, in Palmer and Delta Junction. Late blight was discovered last week in Palmer. Late blight can be controlled through the use of fungicides. The Delta producer is also working to prevent infecting the rest of his fields or his neighbors'. The UAF Cooperative Extension Service is working with major potato producers to help prevent the spread of the blight, a fungus-like disease that was responsible for the Irish potato famine. The disease can rapidly kill plants in the field or cause potatoes to rot in storage. Potatoes from diseased plants remain good to eat, as long as they do not show signs of the blight, but should not be stored as seed pota-

Earthquake rattles Aleutians

An earthquake with a magnitude of 6.8 was registered 27 miles southwest of Amukta Island on Friday, September 2. The quake set off a tsunami warning from Unimak Pass to Amchitka, but was canceled after only a small wave rippled into Atka. No damages were reported.

next go-around Sept. 12.

The current abatement list is just a start, according to Councilwoman Mary Knodel. She urged the City administration to stay on the abatement job, that there were more than 100 buildings ready to go. Nome Police Chief John Papasodora, Maxwell and Nome's emergency responders nominated the buildings on the current list

Danny Aukon Jr. resentenced

A resentencing hearing for Danny Aukon, Jr. netted the 51-year-old the same amount of jail time that he was originally sentenced for -10 years but reconfigured the sentence components of his consecutive and concurrent jail time to be served.

The legal wrangling stems from an accident that happened in August 2009. Aukon, his son and a friend came from a hunting trip when Aukon's truck hit Charlie Bergamaschi who was walking on the shoulder of the Nome-Council Highway, near Swanberg's Dredge. Aukon got out of the car, saw that he had hit a man, but didn't render help and left the scene of the accident.

Aukon was tried in a jury trial and convicted of manslaughter, leaving the scene of an accident and driving under the influence of alcohol. Superior Court Judge Ben Esch handed down a sentence of 12 years in prison with five years suspended for the manslaughter charge and a consecutive sentence of three years for leaving the scene and a concurrent 30-day sentence for drunk driving.

Aukon appealed Judge Esch's decision to impose consecutive sentences because the sentence exceeded the presumptive range. The presumptive range for manslaughter is between seven and 11 years in jail. Since Judge Esch handed down a 12year sentence - even though with five years suspended - the Court of Appeals remanded the case back to the Superior Court for resentencing.

During a recent resentencing hearing, Judge Esch amended the sentence for the manslaughter charge and imposed 11 years in prison with four years suspended, consecutively served to the three years jail time for the conviction of leaving the scene of the accident. The resentencing still nets Aukon 10 years in prison.

Prior to handing down the sentence, Judge Esch gave Aukon the opportunity to address the court. Aukon said that he has been in prisons in Nome, Seward, Anchorage and Colorado. There he went through anger management programs, worked as a librarian and participates in AAA programs. He said he hopes to continue his education and rehabilitation

Little Diomede Island still without regularly scheduled passenger service

By Diana Haecker

Getting to Little Diomede and back to the mainland is an unpredictable undertaking that leaves the small community of about 115 people hanging in uncertainty. That's nothing new. Whenever Diomeders want to travel, need to see a doctor, take a driver's test, attend meetings or training and come back home to the island, they need to cross their fingers that there is space available on the helicopter that delivers mail to the island. And they need to be prepared for involuntary extensions of their trip

After a spell of no passenger service whatsoever, Evergreen Helicopters, the company that has the postal contract to deliver mail, now again uses a twin-engine helicopter and has pilots stationed in Nome 24/7. On a space available basis, passengers can get a ride to and from Diomede for $160 between Wales and Diomede or for $320 between Nome and Diomede.

But it's not regular, not scheduled and getting off the island is easier than catching a ride back to Little Diomede as the helicopter is usually packed with mail to the island. And the situation is not improving.

Last winter, The Nome Nugget reported that people from Little Diomede were not able to return home and were being stranded in Nome for months. In June, a baby with a medical emergency and two pregnant women had to be medi-vaced from the island by an Alaska National Guard crew from Kodiak. At the time, no other air service was available and the local National Guard was short a crew master to fly the Black Hawk stationed in Nome.

Starting in summer 2009 Evergreen switched to single engine aircraft and limited passenger transport to periods of time when the ice cover was stable enough to provide emergency landing spots in case the single engine fails.

A few months ago Evergreen switched again to a twin-engine helicopter, but the premises of Evergreen's service still haven't changed: mail delivery first and passenger service later. Evergreen pilots say that there is usually enough space for people to get off the island, but when taking mail from the mainland to Diomede, space is limited.

An Evergreen pilot explained that every Wednesday, they take priority

Former Nome student dies after being hit by out-of-control driver

By Diana Haecker

Sixth-grade student Jamison Thrun, 11, succumbed to injuries sustained when a speeding SUV hit him crossing a road to University Park Elementary School in Fairbanks on Tuesday, August 30. Troopers said in a press release that the child was pronounced dead the same night at 8:55 p.m. at the Fairbanks Memorial Hospital.

The tragedy happened on Tuesday morning around 8:20 a.m. just a block away from the school. A 68year-old woman allegedly influenced by an impairing cocktail of prescription drugs ran a stop sign, sped across the intersection of Birch Lane and Loftus Road, hit Jamison and continued on through two yards before being stopped by a homeowner. The woman, Yiki Kim, had her own grandchildren in the car and was taking them to the same school. Kim was arrested and charged with one count of manslaughter and one count of reckless driving. Kim was arraigned in court on Thursday afternoon and Fairbanks magistrate Alicemary Rasley set bail at $500,000. The District Attorney sought bail of $250,000 but the magistrate doubled the amount, saying that Kim poses a risk to the public.

According to court papers, witnesses saw the SUV driven by Kim traveling at about 40 mph. A witness heard the car sliding before it crashed, the Trooper's statement said. He ran to the scene and saw Jamison on the ground, unconscious and unresponsive. Other witnesses had turned the child on his back and started CPR. At 8:24 a.m. emergency medical personnel arrived and transported the child to Fairbanks Memorial Hospital. Alaska Trooper Sgt. Brian Wassmann wrote in his statement to the court that witnesses saw the blue Toyota Highlander driven by Kim "barrel" through the intersection without stopping at the stop sign, crashing through a ditch, through a fence, racing through a yard and stopping in the neighboring yard. The property owner of the yard where Kim finally stopped kept Kim from driving off. Wassmann wrote that Kim was still sitting in the car when he came to the scene. "She was sitting behind the wheel of the Toyota SUV," he wrote. "She had glossy and watery eyes. Kim said she was driving and she could not explain why she crashed," Sgt. Wassmann wrote in the complaint. "Kim could not explain why she lost control of the car.[...] Kim saw a boy wearing a red jacket and she said she tried to swerve to avoid hitting him," the complaint reads.

Kim failed a series of field sobriety tests including the walk-and-turn test and the one-leg stand. Troopers arrested her on the spot. Kim was initially charged with assault in the first degree and reckless driving. The assault charge was upgraded to a manslaughter charge. The trooper said he went to Fairbanks Memorial Hospital and met with Kelly Thrun. "I learned that Jamison Thrun suffered a broken neck and possible head injuries in the crash," Sgt.

Wassmann wrote. The trooper then went to obtain Yiki Kim's prescription medication from her residence. The woman had admitted to taking seven types of prescribed medication around 6:30 a.m. that morning. Six of the medications, the trooper said, had bold warning labels. Five labels stated that the meds "may cause dizziness", one label said, "may cause drowsiness. Alcohol could intensify this effect. Use caution when operating a car or dangerous machine."

The Thruns have just recently moved from Nome to Fairbanks, where his mother Kelly Thrun took a teaching job.

In Fairbanks, students of University Park Elementary School held a memorial walk on Friday. In Nome, Jamison's former classmates in the fifth and sixth grade pod of the Nome Elementary School held a ceremony and wore Jamison's favorite color, pink. They released helium balloons, and the kids were writing letters and cards to the Thrun family. Behavioral Health counselors were on hand to provide guidance for the grieving children. Well-wishers decorated the white picket fence around Thrun's house in Nome with colorful wreaths, geranium flowers, Lego and stuffed toys.

Jamison Thrun's funeral was held on Monday. A family friend has set up a Wells Fargo account for donations to help with expenses. The account number is 2656432123.

Medearis BRIDGE TO COUNCIL?—A road from Fairbanks to Nome would cross the Niukluk River, spanned for years by drivers who know the correct approach by driving across with water up to the running boards. Such a road likely would run across the state and join the Nome area road system near Council, a former mining town now largely populated by snow-birds answer sessions, the DOT&PF has issued a report derived from what more than half of the public, the stakeholders, told them: The Yukon River Corridor is their favored route too. The department rolled out the road show in Nome last October. Reaction was mixed, with folks wanting access to lower prices for goods and fuel, but concerned about the impacts on subsistence and the environment. Some favored a railroad that would control access to wilderness areas and villages.

In response to a question and comment form from all communities, more than half, 55 percent, said they favor connecting the Seward Peninsula and Nome area to the Fairbanks area, with 35 percent for no road and seven percent undecided. Communities within 25 miles of the YRC favored that route by 62 percent, with 32 percent against it and six percent undecided. Some of the communities along the corridor starting with Manley Hot Springs and moving west are Tanana, Ruby, Galena, Koyuk, Nulato, Elim, Golovin, White Mountain, Council and Nome.

Those in favor of a connecting road most frequently listed the following advantages:

- Economic development and mining access to bring wealth to remote areas of the state and create an in-state economy and add jobs.
- Lower the cost of living with cheaper access—cheaper gas and fuel, cheaper goods and postal costs in interior villages.
- Connection with the road system and major communities and cities in the state.
- Possibly create better job options for rural Alaskans along the roadway that would be closer to home for village residents.
- Allowing access by public roads to Alaskans that live in Western Alaska for better availability of fresh produce and agriculture products.
- Implementing existing routes would save and be money well

Those who participated in the forums most frequently listed the following negatives stemming from an access road:

- Loss of traditional lifestyle with huge impact on remote way of living with the land and the Yukon River.
- Increased hunting pressure on wildlife with Outside hunters having access, diminishing the remote character of Alaska along the road.
- Mine-generated waste and environmental issues concerning water runoff and pollution.
- Building the road and maintaining it costing an enormous amount of money with benefits overstated and costs understated.
- Crime will come in on the road to villages—drugs, alcohol, and "wild things."
- The road will bring changes to subsistence lifestyle that people want to continue to pass down through future generations. People will be "killing our game and catching our fish."

What's next?

Money for preliminary planning and design doubled when an additional $1.25 million stayed in this year's state capital budget unscathed by Gov. Sean Parnell's veto pen.

A NANA consulting company, DOWL HKM, performed the study for the state. The outcome said the road could cost close to $3 billion, or $5.4 million per mile, or around $1,000 per foot. Maintenance and repairs could cost about $40 million per year. The Yukon River Corridor option would start about 165 miles from Fairbanks and cross 185 miles of wetlands, 135 miles of rolling terrain and 65 miles of mountainous land. At Council, a bridge across the Niukluk River would be in the planning picture.

While most Alaska Native groups cited in the executive summary released last month favored the road, some expressed reservations, Council Native Corp. Board of Directors voted unanimously to oppose the construction of the Fairbanks to Nome road project, telling the planners "After long consideration we feel the negative outcome far outweighs the positive outcomes."

Let us help you pave your road to success!

DELIVERY TO LITTLE DIOMEDE— The runway at Little Diomede Island is seasonal and can handle scheduled passenger and freight only during the winter months after the Bering Strait freezes. Nugget file photo by Diana Haecker mail from Nome to Diomede and fly second class mail and cargo mail that was delivered via other carriers to Wales from there to the island. Before school started, one Evergreen pilot said, he had to make nine runs from Wales to Diomede to get all the mail across.

He said that every time he flies, he has at least two or three passengers that he gets to or from the island on one of the many runs he has to make to transport the mail. One of the three seats is usually open, even if mail is onboard. But scheduling passengers is a hard, he said. Factors that compound the unpredictability are fast changing weather and the everchanging amount of mail. Although the good will is there, the marching orders are clear: mail first, passengers second.

This situation changes for a few short months in the spring when the ice in front of Diomede is thick enough for a makeshift ice runway that is used by fixed wing airplanes to deliver goods and people to the island.

The path to a resolution of the problem proves to be a veritable Odyssey. Since last year, Kawerak vice president Melanie Bahnke had tried it all: alerting the Alaska Congressional Delegation, putting the situation on local legislators' radar, communicating with various agencies in the State of Alaska. Norton Sound Health Corporation board of directors chairwoman Emily Hughes hand delivered a letter asking for Essential Air Service grants from the Diomede IRA to presidential staff. And Kawerak Inc. began advocating at the state and federal level to find a solution to the chronic lack of regular transportation.

The goal is to take advantage of the federal Essential Air Services program, which in some cases provides a 100 percent subsidy when a community only has one air carrier providing services. However, to qualify for that, a community has to be on an EAS eligibility list that was established in the 1970s. Diomede not being on that list, a second program offers an EAS subsidy that requires a 50 percent match.

The FAA's Essential Air Services program is willing to provide the 50 percent subsidy, but finding an Alaskan partner to drum up the match seems to be impossible. Kawerak's position is that the State of Alaska should provide the 50 percent match. "Our intent is not to ask for free service, but all along our position at Kawerak is that the state should step up to the plate and provide the match," Bahnke said.

But in teleconference after teleconference, responsibilities were shuffled from the Governor's office to the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development and then eventually to the legislature. The DCCE asked Kawerak Inc. to become the trustee of the EAS subsidy, tasked to administer the funds and to drum up financial support from other entities and Diomede for matches.

Paul Labolle is a legislative aid for Rep. Foster and familiar with the issue. He points out that the EAS' future is uncertain as the program was on the chopping block the last time Congress voted to approve a continuing resolution to keep the Federal Aviation Administration going.

"It is uncertain what happens with the FAA reauthorization, as they keep operating on continuing resolutions," Labolle said. "The EAS in general was at risk, but in the end Alaskan airports survived that threat. However, we don't know if the 50

Gold dredge capsizes in front of Nome, no injuries reported

By Diana Haecker

On Wednesday evening, only a few yards off the seawall in front of Nome an ocean going gold dredge took on water and flipped over. Nome's local emergency services responded with The Guardian rescue

Other emergency personnel, the fire chief and harbormaster Joy Baker responded and assessed the situation from the seawall. The two people that were working the dredge managed to avoid injury. One was climbing onto the bottom of the boat when the vessel rolled. The diver was the other person. Both escaped the accident without injuries, according to firefighter Jerry Steiger at the scene. The dredge named Old Eureka is owned by Mike Benchoff. One of the pontoons took on water and a wave tipped the vessel over. Shawn Pomrenke operated his gold dredge nearby and came to rescue the upside down vessel. The Old Eureka's diver, riding a skiff, collected items that floated in the water. Pomrenke tried to flip the sunken gold dredge right side up again.

At one point Pomrenke jumped into the bucket of the excavator mounted on his dredge and tied a chain to the bucket and the vessel. A few times he came close to getting the sunken dredge afloat again, but then the vessel came crashing, down almost hitting his rig when the chain broke.

Pomrenke aborted the attempt to right the vessel and towed it into the safety of the harbor late at night.

Harbor officials observed a slight sheen around the parked and damaged Old Eureka and put a boom around the vessel to prevent the spread. The next day the damaged dredge was hauled out of the water. The incident was reported to the Coast Guard

Crowley wins again

By Diana Haecker

A stiff breeze out of the north, mostly sunny skies and warm temperatures made the 34th annual Great Bathtub race a pleasant event even though water balloons went aflying, splashing unsuspecting spectators.

For those unfamiliar with the race rules: a five-member team consisting of one rider in the water-filled bathtub and four pushers sporting sombreros and some semblance of suspenders, push, pull or wheel the bathtub from City Hall to the Federal Building.

This year, after a late start, the four fiercly competing teams consisted of Crowley Petroleum, KICY Radio, Leo's Red Bare'n and KNOM Radio. Each one gave it all as they sprinted down Front Street.

The Crowley bathtub, sporting the biggest and undefeatedly fastest wheels, won again. The Crowley crew were captain Ericka Peterson, towel guard Dean Hildreth, bath mat guard Mikey Wongittilin, washcloth guard Alexie Morris and soap guard Jake Stettenbenz.

Second place went to KICY, third to Leo's Red Bare'n, and the joyous KNOM crew brought home red lantern honors. Bath tub race founder Leo Rasmusen, taking delight in spraying the throng of spectators along Front Street, thanked KNOM at the finish line for being slower than his bathtub pushers.

As is tradition, the GBR ended with a group picture of the competi-tors and the disbursement of trophies for all participants.

The Dock Walk

Nome harbormaster Joy Baker and assistant Lucas Stotts provide Nomeites with an update on harbor activities: On Monday, the tug FishHawk and a gravel barge arrived and went into lay-up inside the small boat harbor for engine repairs.

It was a pretty good workday for dredges, and fishing boats delivered halibut to the fish plant. On Tuesday the tug Kaktovik and a barge arrived with engine trouble. They lost engine power coming into the small boat harbor channel and wound up on the beach near the causeway bridge. The vessel is scheduled for repairs, and officials are putting a plan together to pull the barge off the beach.

On Wednesday, the Asteria, a private yacht arrived for a three-day stay at the causeway. They came through the Northwest Passage and are on their way to Japan. #### Jamison Miles Lee Thrun

Jamison Miles Lee Thrun was the first child and son of Shannon and Kelly and first grandchild of Cussy Kauer, a new grandson of Tom Reardon, and third grandson of Arlinda and LeRoy Thrun. He was born on December 2, 1999 in Anchorage to his enthusiastic parents and was brought home to Nome to anxiously waiting family and friends. As a baby, Jamison was special and unique from the day he arrived. Never short of smiles and kisses for his family members, he giggled with animals, and practice with his bow and arrow for hours. He excelled and loved so dearly being in Cub Scouts and had just become a member of Boy Scout troop 298 this year. He attended and absolutely loved the Unalakleet Bible Camp.

The family traveled to Minnesota to see grandma and grandpa LeRoy and Arlinda Thrun and uncles Robby and Scott and his beloved cousins as often as they could. Jamison searched to find turtles and their eggs, fished the land of 10,000 lakes, went for rides in grandpa's boat and delight at his stuffed animals, itty bitty frogs, and handmade curtains and blankets tenderly made by his loving aunties Josie, Ginny, Mary, Julie, Babe, and great-grandma Caroline Reader. He was doted on by his new parents and other extended family members.

As a toddler Jamison welcomed his little brother Kayden and he became the best and most proud big brother. He loved pulling all of his toys out of his toy box and getting in it with his little playmate. He encountered every moment with rare vivaciousness and zeal for life. His mother dressed him from the time he was born in many exquisite costumes, and he was involved in parades and every social event in Nome. He was the conductor of the Curly Q Railroad, Winnie the Pooh's honey pot, Little Red Riding Hood's woodsman, a bunny at Easter, but most importantly the apple of his family's eye. Growing and ever curious, his babysitter Alicia Iyatunguk said he loved bugs and would never let her even kill the flies in the house. Alicia said Jamison hated to be scolded and always wanted to be a good boy.

At age seven, Jamison welcomed his pretty princess sister Karley and he grew into a very protective and helpful big brother. To Jamison, family was the center of his world, a trait deeply instilled by his parents. He played softball every summer and he tried basketball and wrestling because he wanted to be like his daddy. He loved camping at the family's Camp Snoopy Cabin on Glacier Creek Road. He would explore and collect insects, watch for on his three-wheeler. He was fascinated by Uncle Bruce's farm.

As Jamie grew to his pre-teen years, his favorite school subject was science and anything that involved being social. He loved lunch and recess and had no problems being laughed at for the sake of making people smile and laugh.

The last few months of his life were full of excitement. After Jamison went to Disneyworld with his family, he moved to Fairbanks from his lifelong home at 724 East Front Street, Nome. Jamison left many dear and lifelong school friends in Nome.

His wonderful good nature and amazing sense of humor made him an immediately popular kid on the University Park Elementary playground located just behind his new home in Fairbanks. Although he attended only eight days of school, he chattered every day to mom and dad about his new friends. He was texting friends and hanging out at the playground throwing footballs and cracking jokes. His new friends have written, "You couldn't NOT smile around him," "When I first saw him he was smiling," and "He was such a nice kid." He thought he was sporty, cheerful, funny, and he loved video games and ice cream. He enjoyed chess, Oreos, his iPad and XBOX, and adored mom, dad, Kayden, Karley, and his dog Tutter. Jamison was thrilled to start a new chapter in his life and expressed repeatedly how happy he was to be in Fairbanks.

The shock of Jamison's untimely death, just four houses down from his new home, has been felt around the state. The outpouring of Fairbanks community members' heartfelt support has helped the family deal not only with their loss but also some of the stresses of moving and acclimating to a new community. He is survived by his parents Shannon and Kelly; his siblings Kayden and Karley; his great-grandparents Caroline Reader and Chuck and

I by his parents; his siblings Kayis great-grandparered and Chuck and Marie Reader; grandparents LeRoy, Arlinda, Cussy, and Tom; and many, many aunts, uncles and cousins in both Alaska and Minnesota.

Nome holds annual Labor Day Duck Race

Photos by Diana Haecker

AND THEY'RE OFF — Over 1,500 rubber ducks where released into the wilds of the Snake River during their annual migration to the finish line just a few hundred yards downstream.

HELPING THE DUCKS — Madeline Koweluk and other kids pushed the stranded ducks back into the mainstream of the fast flowing Snake River.

By Stephen Palmatier

This past Monday, the annual Labor Day tradition of Nome continued as the Rotary Club held its annual Duck Race on the Snake River. Thousands of rubber ducks were dumped into the river for this year's event, and only a small amount of them even made it to the end point of the race on the river. In first place this year, the lucky winner was Mo Koezuna who took home $1,500 for her win. Finishing behind her in second place was the duck bought by Ric Schmidt, followed in third place by Pat Booth. Along with the three first finishing ducks announced, they also announce what is known as the "Wild Duck," which is a random pick of the ducks that finish. The lucky winner this year for that award belonged to Brian Perry.

What took only a matter of minutes to complete seemed to last for hours as dozens of people witnessed with intrigue as their rubber ducks slowly but surely floated down the river with the wind whipping and helping them at times along the way. Along with the bathtub race, the Duck Race continues to be an annual tradition in Nome that fascinates the community to watch.

Cancer of the colon and rectum can be prevented

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Cancers in the colon or rectum, called colorectal cancers, are the second leading cause of cancer death in the United States, behind lung

These alternate methods, though admittedly more comfortable, do not replace the need for colonoscopy if cancer is suspected. For example, if trace amounts of blood are found in the stool, or if a polyp or suspected cancer is identified by CT or X-ray, a person would still need to undergo colonoscopy to evaluate the source of bleeding, remove the polyp, or to biopsy the suspected cancer. Furthermore, only colonoscopy can detect polyps when they are very

Therefore most experts recommend a full colonoscopy every 10 years for otherwise healthy persons over age 50 or younger persons with a strong family history of colorectal

There are many options for colorectal cancer screening in Alaska. During your next exam, talk to your doctor about colorectal screening especially if you are over age 50, have never been screened, or have a family history of colorectal cancers.

cancer. According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), over the last decade the number of deaths from colorectal cancer has fallen. This is largely due to recognition of certain risk factors and regular cancer screening.

People more likely to develop colorectal cancers include:

- 1. Men and women over age 50. 2. Those with parents or siblings who have developed colorectal can-
- cer. 3. People with a diet high in animal fats and low in vegetables.
- Smokers.
- 5. People with inflammatory bowel diseases like Crohn's disease or ulcerative colitis.

Colorectal cancers grow very slowly. Most tumors start as small skin-tag like structures called adenomatous polyps that are often no larger than a small berry. It may take 10-15 years for a polyp to grow into an invasive deadly cancer. If detected early, these polyps can be reusually during colonoscopy, thereby preventing any future development of cancer.

The key is to find the cancer while it is small and easily removed. Symptoms of colorectal cancer like abdominal pain and rectal bleeding unfortunately develop very late in the disease. Therefore screening is the only way to detect colorectal cancer in its earliest and most treatable form.

The American Cancer Society recognizes several methods for colorectal cancer screening.

The most reliable screening exam is a colonoscopy. This test allows the physician to directly visualize the entire colon and remove any polyps or biopsy any suspicious lesions using a thin scope.

Other screening options include: occult blood testing, a lab test looking for trace amounts of blood in the stool; flexible sigmoidoscopy, a shorter version of the colonoscopy that screens about a third of the colon; a double-contrast barium Xray that gives radiologists a snapshot of the entire colon; and virtual colonoscopy which uses computed tomography (CT scanner) to screen for polyps.

percent EAS program will survive the next time around." Labolle also said that Rep. Foster would try to insert requests for the EAS match in the operating budget amendment for fiscal year 2013 when the legislature meets again.

In the meantime, talks stalled as the city of Little Diomede decided to not pursue the EAS subsidy, Scott Ruby with the Dept. of Commerce said. He is the director of Community and Regional Affairs and said that after a series of meetings with Evergreen, the city of Little Diomede and Kawerak, Little Diomede withdrew their application for the EAS. "The EAS grant is a matching grant where the feds would pay half of the subsidized cost of an estimated $400,000 for weekly flight a year," Ruby explained. "The regional partners would pay the rest, it has to be cash upfront and because of the logistics involved, the city council was not willing to commit the funds,"

"Diomede feels that it has adequate service now and chose not to pursue the EAS grant." Ruby said that the discussion could reopen anytime, but until Diomede is willing to apply for the EAS subsidy, the state has no further involvement in the Little Diomede Mayor Dora Ahkinga, in a short cell phone conversation (with a bad connection that eventually broke) with The Nome Nugget, confirmed that Diomede is satisfied with the air service as is.

Ahkinga was stranded in Wales en route to Little Diomede.

Long-term solutions don't seem to be on the horizon.

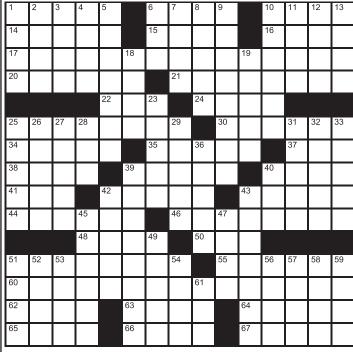

'We're spinning our wheels," said a frustrated Melanie Bahnke as the state withdrew its involvement. After writing letters to Governor Parnell, she asked the state for a 50 percent match for the EAS subsidy or securing passenger services via other mechanisms. Senator Mark Begich sent a letter to Governor Sean Parnell with the same request. The state offered technical assistance, but it took emails from Bahnke to the state in December 2009, April 2010 and June 2010 asking the same question: "Where are we with this?" When passenger service stopped altogether in June 2010 she helped draft an emergency declaration that wasn't acted upon.

From her perspective, it's not just a quality of life issue but the travel impediments hinder services to be provided to Diomede. "Of all the communities we serve, Little Diomede is the least served," Bahnke

With only sketchy once-a-week service, Diomede gets no visits from providers. "As soon as the ice runway forms we hit Diomede with providers," Bahnke said. And Diomeders hesitate to leave the island for professional training for fear of having a hard time to return. Patients returning from a trip to the doctor may get to Wales, but then it's either waiting for the helicopter or catching an uncomfortable ride on a skiff across the channel. Bahnke said just recently a young mother and her newborn baby made it from Nome to Wales but then took a boat to the island – a dangerous ride that visiting, well-heeled adventurers undertake with high-tech equipment and sponsor stickers on their survival

According to Bahnke, the 50 percent match would amount to $186,000. "That is a petty amount of funding in comparison to the amount of funding that the State of Alaska provides to subsidize the ferry system in Southeast Alaska," she told Rep. Foster during a recent constituent meeting. While the world discusses the possibilities of an ice free Arctic Ocean in the summer and increased shipping and transportation or oil and gas developments, the one community that sits at the chokepoint of the Bering Strait, Little Diomede, seems to be on the dark side of the moon when it comes to just the basics: getting off and back onto the rock.

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Julie Yoder Elmore
Pastor at Community United Methodist Church
A Member of the Nome Ministerial Association
Scripture: Romans 13:8-10

Our region has experienced much grief over the last several months. It almost seems like more sorrow than anyone of can bear, especially if we try to bear that sorrow all on our own. Over the summer I officiated at several funerals and in the midst of preparation, saw much love and care expressed to the immediate families of the deceased. Friends came from near and far to help in any way they could whether to be a pall bearer, organize the funeral potluck or reception, share something meaningful in the funeral service, provide a meal, answer the phone on behalf of the family, or simply be present, bringing comfort to those who were grieving. This love and care was for me a glimpse of the Kingdom of God in this broken world. As we await Jesus to come again in final victory, there are going to be times of tragedy. Yet in the midst of tragedy, God is present showing us signs of hope as we share love and care with one another.

The last part of Romans 13:9 and beginning of verse 10 say "'Love your neighbor as yourself.' Love does no wrong to a neighbor." Loving our neighbor means that we are always striving to look out for the best interest of our neighbor, even when that neighbor is difficult to love. It means acting in such a way that we do not harm our neighbor. Our neighbor is not necessarily the people who live around us, but also includes anyone in our lives who needs our help. Sometimes our neighbors think like us and look like us, but many times our neighbors are people with whom we disagree and do not look anything like us. Loving our neighbor means creating a space where genuine sharing through conversation can take place – genuine sharing without fear that someone is going to disrespect our deepest thoughts and feelings. We share our stories and experiences not to cast blame, but to bring awareness to others.

With God's help through authentic genuine sharing, perhaps we as a community can discern and discover new and creative solutions to issues facing our communities today. Some pretty unlovable things happen in our communities, but how can we as people of God who love our neighbors bring about change so that we can see more glimpses of the Kingdom of God in our midst? Certainly death and tragedy cannot be the only times when we show love for our neighbors in their time of need. With God's help, may we all seek to love our neighbor as ourselves with the love that does no wrong to a neighbor.

I. Solicitation

Norton Sound Health Corporation. (NSHC) is soliciting qualifications from artists to commission three pieces of art for the Nome replacement hospital project. Qualifications may consist of photographs of previous work, a resume, or any other two dimensional material which accurately illustrates the artist's style, including preferred mediums.

II. Background and Project Summary

Norton Sound Health Corporation operates an existing 18 bed secondary care hospital serving the entire Norton Sound region. The Indian Health Service (IHS) determined the existing hospital facility is beyond its useful life and in need of replacement. Final planning documents for a new replacement hospital were approved by IHS in 2006 and construction is now underway. The new hospital is on the east side of Nome, approximately two miles from the existing facility. Inpatient, outpatient, and variety of support services will move to the new hospital. Construction will be complete in late 2012.

The project budget includes $533,000 for art in the new hospital. Working with the project architect, Kumin and Associates, Inc., (KAI), the NSHC art committee has identified locations for art throughout the facility. Art will consist of transferred pieces from the existing facility, donated work, purchased art from the local community, and commissioned art. This RFQ process is only for the commissioned work.

Listed below are the three areas in the building where commissioned work will be located:

- 1. The first location is above the ground level lobby. An open atrium spanning to the underside of level two offers an idyllic location for a hanging piece. Additional support steel will be installed above the ceiling to increase configuration options.
- 2. The second location is on the North wall of the first floor shared waiting. Three adjacent open walls separated by doorways provide approximately 650 square feet of surface area for customized artwork. Above ceiling electrical J-boxes have been installed to facilitate the addition of accent lighting as needed.
- 3. The third location is on the North wall of the second floor shared waiting in front of the cafeteria. This area provides approximately 300 square feet of highly visible wall space. Above ceiling electrical Jboxes have been installed to facilitate the addition of accent lighting as needed.

III. Selection Process

Submitted qualifications will be reviewed by the NSHC art committee to determine a list of finalists. Those artists selected as finalists, will receive written direction to submit a specific proposal outlining their design concept. Finalists will have 1 month to develop proposals. The NSHC art committee will review the proposals and select three commissioned pieces. Formal contracts will be awarded to the artists within 30 days following selection. Reference paragraph XI of this RFQ for timeline with specific

IV. Selection Criteria

Artists will be selected to develop proposals based on:

- 1. Artistic Merit as evidenced by representation of relevant past work.
- 2. Appropriateness of the artist's medium, style and previous experience in relation to the project goals and setting.

V. Submittals

To be considered, offerors must deliver qualifications to the address below, on or before the deadline, and in the number of copies indicated below. This is not a postmark deadline.

Deadline: Qualifications will be accepted until Wednesday, September 28th, 2011 at 4:00 PM.

Address Responses:

(Via USPS mail) - NSHC, c/o Michele Woods, P.O. Box 966 Nome, AK 99762 (Hand delivery) - NSHC, c/o Michele Woods, 306 W. 5th Ave Nome, AK 99762 Mark Submittals as Follows: Artist Qualifications - NSHC Replacement Hospital

Required Number of Copies: Five (5) copies

All entries accompanied by a self-addressed stamped package, with adequate postage will be returned to the artist.

VI. Courtesy Project Tour

There will be a courtesy hard-hat tour of the project on Friday, September 16th at 2:00 PM. The tour will be through an active construction site; appropriate clothing, including closed-toe foot wear, will be required. Hard hats and safety vests will be provided. The tour group will convene in front of the owner's trailer at 1:50 PM. If you plan to attend the tour, notify Michelle Woods at the project office (907) 443-6769. Tour participation is NOT required to submit qualifications.

The design team and NSHC board envision a facility housing native art reflective of the entire Norton Sound region. The goal is a body of work which highlights the unique traits of each native subculture, but collectively represents the Norton Sound region as a whole.

VIII. History

The new Norton Sound Regional Hospital, in Nome, is located in the Bering Strait region service area. The Bering Strait region is located on the southern coast of the Seward Peninsula in northwest Alaska, 539 air miles Northwest of Anchorage. The region is home to three distinct cultural groups of Eskimo people with the majority of people living in the traditional Inupiat villages of Shishmaref, Diomede, Brevig Mission, Mary's Igloo, Teller, King Island, Solomon, Council, White Mountain, Golovin, Elim, Koyuk, Shaktoolik, and Unalakleet. The St. Lawrence Island Yupik people live in Gambell and Savoonga and have a distinct culture and dialect referred to as Siberian Yupik. The communities of Golovin and Elim are traditionally Unaliq, which is a branch of Central Yup'ik. Stebbins and St. Michael are Central Yup'ik. There are many other distinctions in the region: All but 1 village, White Mountain, are coastal communities; three of the villages are island communities with distinct island hunting and gathering culture. The Yupik people of St. Lawrence Island have the only Eskimo society that is known to be clan based. The villages of Diomede, Gambell, and Savoonga have direct ties to relatives in the Russian Far East.

IX. Other Requirements

There are no restrictions on style of work or materials, but the work must be sturdy and durable with minimal routine maintenance required. This is a seismic occupancy category 4 area, suspended work must confirm to the IBC 2006 building code.

Alyce Martin Sly and Renneth Sly

Nome Nugget,

We enjoyed a wonderful visit to Nome in July. Not much has changed from when I was a child, except the Glue Pot is gone! I have such good memories of my grandpa Frank Martin taking me there.

I thought you might be interested in our story for your newspaper. Some of the information we got from The Nome Nugget, June 14, 1939.

While in Nome we enjoyed feasting on king crab (twice!). Our mother's first cousin Girly (Catherine Dickson) steamed them for us — delicious!

We also enjoyed having hundreds of old pictures our Mom had, with relatives in Nome and leaving items, pictures with relatives to be donated to the Carrie

M. McLain Memorial Museum in Nome.

I have great memories of Nome that keep drawing me back.

Thank you, Suzanne Johansen Indianapolis, IN 46237

Nome native Alyce Martin Sly and her husband Kenneth Sly have come full circle from where their romance began.

This love story started on June 13, 1939 when the S.S. Columbia arrived in Nome carrying 18-year-old Kenny Sly, a recent graduate from South High School, Salt Lake City, Utah. Young Kenny came to Nome to join his older brother and his wife, Howard and Lois Sly for a new adventure, with plans to work to earn money for college.

steamer on one of the Lomen Lighterage Barges. Dispensing music coming and going for the passengers and crew of the ship, Alyce recalled seeing a tall, dark, handsome lad standing aboard the ship.

Their eyes met, they held a brief gaze, and later that evening at a dance hosted by Nome for the incoming steamer the young couple met. The rest is history.

Alyce, one of 10 children born to Frank and Lucy (Uttuna) Martin of Cape Nome, and Ken started dating. Due to a very strict French Canadian father, they were always chaperoned until February 1941 when Alyce turned 18 years old. On October 3, 1941 the couple was married in Nome. This union lasted 56 years until Ken died July 7, 1995 in Tooele, Utah.

lived in Nome, where Ken enlisted in the Army Air Corps, which relocated them to Fairbanks for the duration of WWII. After the War, Alyce and Ken opened and operated several businesses in Fairbanks. Their union produced three children, Suzanne (1943) and Kenneth Frank (1947), both born in Fairbanks, and Jim (1953) who was born in Salt Lake City where the family moved to get out of the harsh elements of Alaska in 1953. This move took them to Tooele, Utah where they spent the remainder of their life together.

In Tooele, Ken owned and operated A & K Meat Packing Plant and Alyce worked as a bookkeeper for a building supply company. In the early 1960s Ken gave up his butchering job for a Government job at Dugway Proving Grounds. He retired from Dugway in 1985, and Alyce retired in 1987.

Retirement took them into the last phase of their life together. The couple spent five months of every winter in El Centro, California enjoying their passion for travel and gold and relaxing with their many friends.

After Ken died in 1995, Alyce was able to remain in her home in Tooele with the help of her children. Sue lived close until 2003, and Frank lived with her tending to her needs as she aged. Jim and his family visited often and took her to Boise for lots of fun-filled visits, and after Sue moved Alyce looked forward to the lengthy visits to wherever Sue was living. These holidays took her to many great places, Texas, Florida, and Indianapolis where in October of 2009 she moved in with Suzanne.

Alyce's last year was filled with lots of love and attention from her two granddaughters, Darci Pederson and Kensly Martinez, and from four of her great grandchildren, Devri and Cole Pederson and Sly and Dax Martinez along with their dogs Cooper, Lucky, and Cheyenna. She also enjoyed the visits from her sons Frank and Jim, her nephew Tom Knudson (sister Ida's son) and many friends.

The hardest part of leaving her home was she also had to leave behind her best friend and beloved sister Lillian Martin Magee. The two sisters growing older and both with health concerns were now each living with family members. Lillian lost her only child Carole Jean to breast cancer in 2003. Carole Jean's son Jason Copley and his wife Natalie and their five children took her into their home in West Jordan, Utah and lovingly cared for her. She also got much joy from being around her beautiful great-grandchildren. Alyce and Lillian were able to Scype back and forth during this time apart, really getting a kick out of the new technology of being able to see each other and talk to each other over the computer, a far cry from living with outhouses and taking turns bathing in a big vat in the middle of the kitchen floor and traveling around by dogsled, as they did while they were young.

Alyce died October 26, 2010 at the home of her daughter Suzanne in Indianapolis, Indiana, with her son Frank and granddaughter Kensly holding her in their arms. Lillian passed away soon after on February 7, 2011 at the home of her grandson Jason in West Jordan, Utah, with her niece Suzanne by her side. Lillian was the last of the 10 Martin children to depart this world.

A memorial was held for Alyce in her hometown of Tooele, Utah on May 14, 2011, and on July 13, 2011 her children Suzanne, Frank and Jim traveled to Nome to scatter the ashes of their parents Alyce and Ken Sly back to where it all began for them, where the River Dock of the Lomen Commercial Company used to be.

On the beautiful morning of July 16, 2011 their children were joined by some family members from Nome in strewing the ashes of their parents into their mother's beloved Bering Sea. Helping in the ceremony were cousin Catherine "Girly"

Dickson, cousin Guy Martin and his wife Blue, their children Jacob, Krystal and Katherine and her daughter, aunt Laura Martin and cousin Mike Cannon. It was a glorious day! They said, "Kenny and Alyce our lovely Eskimo mother, have come full circle."

Family information: parents father Frank R. Martin, a/k/a Raoul Gauthier (changed his name after arriving in Nome because nobody could pronounce it), arrived in Nome at age 16 during the Gold Rush in 1896 after running away from home in Montreal, Canada because his parents were planning on putting him into the priesthood. He married Lucy "Uttuana" (born on Little Diomede, sister of Joe Amarok) on October 1, 1917.

Frank Martin, Nome, Alaska. He went from gold miner to a fur trader and also worked as a carpenter.

Lucy (Uttuana) Martin. Nome, Alaska around 1909.

Tug spills 1,000 gal. of diesel into Nome Port

By Diana Haecker

The strong smell of diesel fuel hung over the Nome harbor area Saturday morning as officials and cleanup crews were working to contain a diesel fuel spill.

The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation reports that a landing craft named Kaktovik II was smashed onto the harbor rocks and spilled between 800 and 1,000 gallons of Arctic diesel fuel #2 into the ocean water. The incident was reported on Saturday at 6 a.m.

The Alaska Logistics landing craft Kaktovik II tried to retrieve a barge that had been sitting for one and a half weeks on the beach outside the small boat harbor on the western side of the beach in the sheltered area between the causeway and the harbor entrance.

When the barge first came in at the end of August, the Kaktovik II lost engine power and drifted west of the navigation channel onto the beach. The Kaktovik II had to be pulled into the harbor, while the barge was left on the beach. The Kaktovik II was undergoing repairs over the Labor Day weekend and could not retrieve the barge during the extreme low water that occurred last week.

Harbormaster Joy Baker explained that with a storm building on Friday, the first opportunity for Alaska Logistics to retrieve the barge would be when the southerly storm surge would bring in enough water to float the barge. But the storm surge also brought strong wave action and winds. Conditions at the time were light drizzle and fog with southwest winds of 20 knots and four to five foot seas.

The DEC spill report says that during the attempt to pull the barge off the beach and into the inner small boat harbor, strong winds and waves turned the Kaktovik II broadside, causing a line to go slack and into the propeller, rendering the vessel without propulsion. The vessel then drifted east toward the harbor entrance and ended up broadside against the armor rock, ripping a 40-foot gash into the side, according to DEC's acting on-scene coordinator

Inuit Circumpolar Council meets in Nome

By Diana Haecker

The Inuit Circumpolar Council held is bi-annual executive council meeting and this time Nomeites didn't have to travel halfway around the world to attend. Six members of the ninemember executive council from Alaska, Greenland, Russia and Canada convened in Nome at the Kawerak Inc. boardroom starting on Wednesday evening through Thursday night. They were ICC Greenland chairman Aqqaluk Lynge, ICC Canada's Duane Smith, ICC Greenland president Carl "Puju" Olsen and executive council member Hjalmar Dahl, ICC Alaska president Jimmy Stotts, executive council member Vera Metcalf and ICC Russia president Tatiana Archirgina. Aqqaluk Lynge said in his opening remarks that the meeting took place in Nome to take advantage of the Beringia Days event and the opportunity to connect with Chukotkans.

During Country reports, ICC Alaska president Jim Stotts reported that he had been meeting with the State Department regarding cooperation on Arctic Council issues and hunting and fishing issues. He said that he tried to do the same with agencies within the State of Alaska but only received a lukewarm reception to his ideas of cooperation. He also said he is in contact with Nome Mayor Denise Michels to work with the ICC and the Coast Guard on is-

Port not happy with 99¢ Romance

By Sandra L. Medearis

The meter is running again on the city attorney's desk to collect Port of Nome tariff fees. According to Josie Bahnke, the City administration asked Brooks Chandler, attorney, to draft a resolution to put before the Nome Common Council seeking permission for a law suit against miner Mike Benchoff and his aluminum boat 99¢ Romance for $7,000.03 in charges for use of Port of Nome facilities by the Romance and the tugboat Rustler, plus damages and attorney fees. The Council postponed action on the resolution for two weeks to receive more information.

The City currently has the owners of Larry's Auto in Court attempting to collect $6,000 in port fees for third parties who parked on port property. That case is slated for a jury trial to begin Oct. 10.

The resolution concerning Benchoff, as put on the table at the Sept. 12 Council meeting, said Benchoff had made no payments to the City and had refused to remove the Romance from the port.

In February, the Romance sank. On June 27, Joy Baker, port boss, "issued a direct order to Mike Benchoff, the registered owner of the vessel, requiring removal from the Port of Nome," according to the resolution. City administrators modified the order a few days later to give Benchoff more time. Early last month, the city attorney requested Benchoff to remove the Romance on or "before 11:49 p.m. August 15, 2011."

Benchoff has failed and refused to remove the boat, according to the resolution, thus breaking the City law that says, "No person may intentionally fail or refuse to comply with an order of the Port Director [Baker]."

During public comment, Benchoff

Dear Editor,

The Nome School Board needs to give a contract to Pat Callahan to be the athletic director. Why we started the new school year without a person in that capacity with a contract shows a lack of professionalism. If the school board does not like the present contract, then that is something that they need to address before the AD has to start preparing for the next season's activities. You have a dedicated person who spends most of his weekends and free time working to make Nome-Beltz High School a better place for Nome's stu-

Again, the Nome superintendent made a recommendation to the board. It appears the board asked him to research and report, and they do not act. We've been through this before with our principal, and assistant principal at Nome-Beltz. Please, it's time to get this settled, and get it out of the news.

I have supported Pat Callahan, as I have seen his commitment to the Nome-Beltz programs, and I really doubt there is anyone who wants to walk in his shoes as athletic director. I wish I had had a person like Pat Callahan in 1974 as athletic director. I think it's unprofessional for board members to publicly use the term "good old boys." Please put this issue to rest, and work on something different for next year. No matter who is athletic director at Nome-Beltz High School, they deserve a contract before the next season's workload starts.

Dear Editor:

As most rural communities know, subsistence lifestyle is a must, and all of you know that there are just a handful of permanent jobs in the bush communities. Should the government approve of drilling up north, the chance of an oil spill will always be there.

Is this a risk that most subsistence users want? Just look at the Exxon Valdez spill that occurred well over 20 years ago. The life styles were changed for the people who used the seas for a source of income and to feed their families. The same goes for the Gulf of Mexico spill that occurred last year. Thousands if not millions of gallons were spilled into the seas, and who knows what the long term damages will be.

Alaska is a great state, and the migratory fowl and mammals know this, so they come here starting as early as March to feed and to breed not only these species come but don't forget about our salmon resources as well. The salmon is a must for all coastal communities and the big rivers such as the Yukon and Kuskokwim.

Without these resources for subsistence and income, everyone will be affected. Just imagine the hundreds of communities without their source of food that comes from the

It's too much of a burden to even think that these living creatures we depend on would be lost if there is a major oil spill into the seas. I think it was two or three springs ago that the studies for ice seals were conducted and some of the seals were given satellite-tracking collars to trace their migratory behavior. Most bearded seals, if not all, were traveling from the North Slope to as far south as Bristol Bay. That data was found with the tracking collars. However the collars were eventually lost, so no one really knows how far the mammals traveled.

With the Bering, Chukchi and Beaufort seas all connected there has to be a steady current that connects with those seas. It would be naive to think that there is no steady current with these seas. I oppose the drillings up north because I fear there will be a major spill and I just don't want the subsistence users to be affected.

Those politicians trying to approve the opening to drill for oil in our northern seas just don't know the important of our subsistence lifestyles. Their source of food comes from the stores and markets and in some cases just dining at restaurants if one does not feel like

Termites

The U.S. Congress has an infestation of destructive little insects that are hell-bent on destroying the structure of government. We need to send the Orkin man to D.C. in November to rid us of the havoc caused by Tea Party reactionaries (they are so far around the bend, they make conservatives look progressive). Our elected officials should be trying to make life better for Americans, not ripping apart the fabric that binds us together as a nation. They think it is noble to tell us to look after our own selves and never mind that nonsense about the wealthy having to pay taxes.

These termites want absolutely no government service for citizens. Well, in these times we just don't have the personal financial resources or the capability to provide the infrastructure of government. The latest victim of the termites is the threat to kill the United States Postal Service. The USPS is probably the only part of government that impacts all Americans. We trust it and need it for personal and commercial business. Yes, it is losing money, but it is providing necessary and priceless service. Surely the money we throw at defense contractors for million dollar screwdrivers could be aimed at the U.S. Mailbox. Heck, one or two of those leeches could fund the Postal Service for a couple years.

On a personal level, many of us in Nome have placed orders for goods where the supplier does not give us the option of using the USPS. Instead, they make us pay big bucks for alternate delivery systems. Perhaps we should boycott these suppliers and order elsewhere. It's time to stamp out the pesky termites. - N.L.M.-

Ice at historic low

Physicists with the University of Bremen, Germany, last week announced that the extent of the Arctic sea ice has reached a historical low at 1.63 million square miles. Georg Heygster and his working group have observed the sea ice retreat 50 percent since 1972. The ice maps observed by scientists at the University also show that the Northwest and Northeast passages were simultaneously ice free. The scientists say the loss of ice is alarming as algae and small animals attached to the bottom of the sea ice find less and less living space and as they are at the beginning of the food chain, endanger the survival of fish, mammals and other marine life.

Murkowski co-chairs new oceans caucus

A bipartisan group of U.S. Senators formed a new Senate Oceans Caucus, aimed to increase awareness on issues facing the oceans and coast. The caucus met for the first time last Monday and installed Senator Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) and Sheldon Whitehouse (D-Rhode Island) as co-chairs. Alaska's junior Senator Mark Begich will serve as honorary co-chair. The caucus maintains that the oceans support millions of jobs in America and contribute more to the country's GDP than the entire farm sector, grossing more than $230 billion in 2004.

A founding charter lays out the principles for the caucus, and addresses the following issues: international and domestic fisheries policy, gaps in ocean science and challenges to ocean and coastal resource management.

Subcommittee ok's dollars for icebreakers

The Department of Homeland Security's 2012 appropriations bill passed the Senate Homeland Security Appropriations Subcommittee last week and included Coast Guard operations, replacing aircraft and enough funds to give Kodiak the full Coast Guard fleet it needs. The bill also includes $39 million for the Coast Guard's Ice Breaker Program and urges the Department of Homeland Security to move forward on fulfilling the Nation's icebreaking requirements for the polar regions. The DHS appropriations bill now goes to the full Senate Appropriations Committee for consideration.

Senate committee approves nominations for two Alaska judges

The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the nominations of Alaska Supreme Court Justice Morgan Christen and Alaska Superior Court Presiding Judge Sharon Gleason in a unanimous, bipartisan voice vote. The nominations now head to the U.S. Senate floor for a final confirmation vote. Justice Christen was nominated to the Ninth Circuit, US Court of Appeals, filling a vacancy that arose when Judge Andrew Kleinfeld of Fairbanks accepted the role of Senior Judge on the Ninth Circuit. Judge Gleason was nominated to serve as a US District Court Judge for the District of Alaska, filling a vacancy that arose when Judge John Sedwick accepted the role of Senior Judge on the District Court.

BOEMRE funds coastal

The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement awarded a $988,000 Coastal Impact Assistance Program grant to the Alaska Department of Natural Resources. The grant will provide funding for the removal, from the state's coast, of more than 400,000 pounds of commercial fishing gear and other marine debris that has accumulated over time. The funding will be spread over two years. The Marine Conservation Alliance Foundation, a non-profit organization that specializes in coastal marine clean up, will assist the Alaska Department of Natural Resources with the project. The Foundation works with a variety of local organizations, tribes and community groups to assess local conditions and remove marine and coastal debris. Grant funding will also support the maintenance and expansion of the Alaska Marine Debris Database, an online tool that tracks the location, amount and type of debris, allowing for more effective planning of future debris-removal operations.

Emmonak woman sentenced to 12 months for stealing tribal money

Kathleen Blanket was sentenced in federal court to 12 months in jail and to pay restitution for $100,000 she stole from the Chuloonawick Native Village. Blanket, now with the married name of Kathleen Lamont, 45, pleaded guilty to stealing money from the tribal organization located in Emmonak. Blanket received payments purporting to be payroll advances but never repaid them and she used the CNV's credit card for cash withdrawals and personal expenses. The organization's bookkeeper Stella Kameroff also stole $22,000 from the organization in the same time frame, between 2004 and 2007. Kameroff was sentenced to five years probation and four months of home confinement.

BETWEEN A ROCK AND A HARD PLACE-Tug Kaktovik II stranded on a rock outside the small boat

Anderson said it's hard to pinpoint to the gallon how much fuel was released, but the agency estimates 800 to 1,000 gallons spilled into the sea. A host of local seamen helped out in responding. A Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. tender, the F/V Egavik with captain Greg Alexander at the helm responded and towed the Kaktovik II off the rocks and into the small boat harbor. John Mehelich assisted with a towing skiff and helped secure the vessel, tender lines and to launch the containment boom.

Don and Cameron Stiles helped by maneuvering the boom to allow the Egavik and the barge Brittney Moe into the harbor.

Captain Adem Boeckman and his boat Anchor Point stood by for assistance and also helped to deploy the containment boom.

The Alaska Logistics crew assisted on shore and aboard the Kaktovik and Brittney Moe.

Crowley, Alaska Logistics and harbor staff worked together to launch and later recover the containment boom.

The Kaktovik II was tied up at the barge ramp and sat there listing to the port side. Harbormaster Joy Baker had crews deploy a yellow boom around the leaning tug, across the width of the Snake River and at the harbor turning basin.

The seas outside the small boat harbor were too rough to make use of the boom. The remaining 1,250 gallons of fuel were lightered off the Kaktovik II. Around noon, the Egavik managed to tow the barge Brittney Moe that was still adrift in the outer harbor inside the small boat harbor.

The Coast Guard took the lead in handling the incident and a DEC official also arrived to help with the spill response. DEC's Ashley Anderson said that officials are now working on a plan to get the Kaktovik to the crane at the eastern end of the small boat harbor and lift it out of the water. It is then to be put on a barge and shipped to Seward for repairs.

MORE BEACHFRONT PROPERTY—Low tides and north winds reveal more beach in front of Nome.

Super low water levels followed by high water

By Diana Haecker

Strong winds out of the north were responsible for the extra beachfront property that was exposed in front of Nome and other communities along Norton Sound. Wes Adkins with the National Weather Service in Nome said that a sustained strong north wind pushed the ocean water out to sea. The water level withdrew to 4 foot below the zero mark that signals the mean water level.

While the NWS in Nome does not keep track of the history of water levels, Adkins said, he hasn't seen the level plummet so low.

For the most part of last week, the water levels were low, but that changed within a 24-hour time when a couple weather fronts that brought blowing rain, fog and drizzle to the area also created a storm surge. On Friday, water levels went from four feet below mean water levels to the zero level at midday to four feet above the mean water level by the evening. Adkins clarified that the low water indeed had nothing to do with tide levels, but rather a retreat and then surge of water due to weather and winds.

Nomeites went out to explore the exposed beach, combed it with metal detectors and investigated stranded sues regarding increased arctic marine shipping assessments.

Most of the meeting centered around an action plan of the socalled 2010 Nuuk Declaration. The declaration asserts the rights of indigenous peoples worldwide and puts the world on notice that with the spotlight of climate change on the Arctic, decisions by other countries or multinational corporations need to take the needs of the Inuit and Arctic inhabitants into account.

One part of the declaration notes "the recent increased developments at the international level affecting Inuit, and the rapid and exponential growth of interest and external activity in the Arctic by powerful states, industry, researchers, and special interests over the past four years will undoubtedly continue and will require considerable attention and vigilance from ICC into the next four years."

In this sense the executive council talked at length about the upcoming 2013 Education and Culture Summit, an Inuit Health strategy, the survival of indigenous arctic languages and the very large question of food security in the Arctic. Stotts said that the ICC Alaska identified food security as the number one issue. The ICC Alaska is about to finalize an analysis of access to traditional foods in Alaska. Once the paper is done, Stotts said, the next step would be to approach the federal government to discuss hunting rights and the rights to manage or co-manage the resources. "Our junior Senator Mark Begich is willing to take up the issue," Stotts said. "We consider this to be a multi-year effort with the goal being that we are going for the right to manage the resources, or at least the right for comanagement."

Chair Lynge described the devastating effect that western junk food has on his people in Greenland. "We are in a food security crisis," Lynge said. "We lose our new generation. They don't cook and eat home-made foods anymore, even though we have management rights of our resources." Lynge said that the young generation is not learning to harvest, cook or prepare Native foods any to strict European Union food, slaughtering and agricultural laws that prescribe that one cannot produce food without a slaughterhouse, and they push cheap food produced in Europe, thanks to subsidies.

The same holds true for Canada, as six out of 10 Inuit children do not get the nutrition needed but grow up with empty calories that cause obesity and diabetes. "A fast food generation is rising and that creates problems," Lynge said. "It is not only about obesity but also the lack of feeling of well-being and leading a good life that can be devastating. We've seen the same problem around the world and we are losing the battle if we don't do something."

Chairman of the Board for Commonwealth of Communities of Indigenous Peoples of the North, Vladimir Etylin stood up and testified to the fact that reindeer herding is a significant source of food security in the Arctic. He talked about a working group of reindeer herders called CARMA, the Circum Arctic Rangifer Monitoring and Assessment network, which was created out of the need to cooperate and coordinate monitoring efforts across the north.

But Etylin, speaking through a translator Antrey Khalkachan, said that every time he travels to Alaska, he sees evidence that Alaska reindeer husbandry is going down, further diminishing the chance for food security. Greenland's Hjalmar Dahl also noted that water should be added to the issue of food security, as water is being commercialized.

The council then addressed the topic of ICC Greenland cooperating with the World Wildlife Fund Greenland in matters of lobbying for a better public hearing process when it comes to resource development projects in Greenland.

Lynge explained that the Greenland government imposes very tight timelines for the public to respond to resource development projects and ICC Greenland would like to engage in talks with the government about a better public hearing process.

The council also addressed UN and Arctic Council issues before concluding the meeting. The next executive council meeting is scheduled to take place in 2012 in Chukotka.

took the lectern and declared he had too, made payments, reducing the bill from "$11,000 or $12,000" down to $7,000. He made the most recent payment in July, he said. Bahnke said the discrepancy in payments "was an oversight on our part."

Benchoff added that his vessel had not leaked pollutants, that since raising the Romance there had been no batteries, no gas, no oil, no petroleum products aboard, that Baker's accusations before the Port Commission concerning leaking oil had been a "fabrication."

The Port Commission unanimously approved the move to sue Benchoff at its last meeting

Bahnke told the Council the Benchoff boats were "taking a lot of room" at the port, that "no other port user was in Benchoff's situation, that all other port users pay as they go."

Councilman Randy Pomeranz moved that the Council take up the Benchoff port issue with more information at the next regular meeting, saying he wanted to see the correspondence on the issue, records on the payments and how they were applied. The Council approved 5-1 with Councilman Stan Andersen voting no. Later in the meeting, Benchoff told the Council he did not want the issue discussed in an executive session, but in public session. Andersen, conducting the meeting in Mayor Denise Michels' absence, assured Benchoff his case would not be discussed in an executive session planned for later that evening, but two weeks hence.

Again, on the subject of oil, Wes Gormley of the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation told the Council that flights he made up and down the coast assured him that oil that leaked from a towing ship Sept. 10 had been pulled out to sea, broken up, dissipated and dispersed when the wind stirred up big swells over the weekend. The Alaska Logistics vessel, Kaktovik II, while its crew tried to move a barge, had a tow rope get wound around the propeller and go out of control into the rocks, opening a 40-foot gash in the fuel tank. The accident released 800 to 1,000 gallons of diesel fuel into Getting back to the executive session, which was called to discuss real estate, the Council came out afterwards to pass a motion to sell the Mini-Convention Center on River Street and pare the costs of running it from next year's budget. The administration will have an ordinance drawn up for the next Council meeting to begin the process of putting the building on the block with a minimum bid to gauge the interest from buyers.

"It costs too much for maintenance and utilities, too much money," Councilwoman Mary Knodel said Monday.

The Council sent a list of 10 properties to splintered kindling effective Nov. 1. That's when owners or their

All is not lost, however, according to Josie Bahnke, city manager, because the Council could postpone abatement case by case based on owners' appeals for more time to fix them up. City law says structures can be targeted for removal if they pose a health or fire hazard or a public nuisance. New deadlines could be set on appeal. The Council has vowed to continue to nominate rundown ramshackle shacks to the abatement list.

- Approved unanimously an inkind donation of 300 square feet of space to Uiviilat Play and Learn Center in the Gold Hill Tutit Ininat Building. Kawerak Child Care Program has rented the space from the City in the past, but the program is facing a shortfall of $100,000 cut in federal funds expected for spending year 2012.

The meeting started off with the upbeat swearing in of newly hired Nome Police Department Officer Shane Miller and K-Nine member of the force, Sage, a four-year old German Shepherd, on the job to help with Nome's serious controlled substances problems. Both have moved to Nome from Sand Point, Alaska, where Sage, trained in drug detection, put $250,000 worth of illegal substances into evidence lockers, according to Miller.

marine life like jellyfish. Other communities also experienced super low water levels. In Unalakleet, a fisherman had to retrieve his net with a four-wheeler. The fast retreating water surprised another fisherman who had to leave his boat high and dry on the exposed bottom of the sea.

In turn, communities like Shishmaref and Savoonga reported high waters as the winds pushed the waters onto northern facing coastline. The northerly winds started on Monday with a peak wind registered at 21 mph. On Tuesday the winds kicked up and the peak wind registered at sustained 38 mph and a peak gust at 48 mph around 8:50 a.m.

The winds went down to 38 mph the next day and slowly died down, just to switch direction to the south. A couple low pressure systems at the Chukchi Sea and near St. Lawrence Island caused the winds to switch direction from the north to the south. The water returned to create a storm

The most notable incident associated with the storm happened at the harbor of Nome, when a vessel broadsided into the armor rock, ripped its fuel tank open and spilled diesel fuel into the harbor. (See details in separate story on page1.)

Nome man dies of gunshot wound

Nome Police responded to 202 W. Second Ave. at 5:30 p.m. Friday afternoon to find the body of Leonard Sarja, 86, on the ground next to his vehicle. Sarja's roommate discovered the body and notified the police.

Sarja ran a plumbing business in Nome.

Norton Sound commercial salmon fishermen earn $1.27 million for 2011 harvest

Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game

Congratulations to Norton Sound commercial salmon fishermen for breaking last year's ex-vessel value record by nearly $50,000 with a catch value this year of $1.27 million. Thanks to Norton Sound Seafood Products office staff, tender crews and plant workers for helping the fishermen set back-to-back records in 2010 and 2011.

This year's commercial chum catch totaled approximately 7,000 less fish compared to the 2010 catch of 117,743 chums, and the total commercial silver catch was approximately 3,000 fish lower than the 62,079 silvers harvested in 2010. However, higher prices paid for chums and silvers this year made the overall exvessel value of the fishery a record. The average price paid for chums this season was 68 cents a pounds, up from 62 cents a pound in 2010, and the average price paid for silvers in 2011 was $1.70 per pound, compared to $1.47 per pound last

The commercial salmon catch for 2011 in Norton Sound totaled 145 kings, 347 sockeyes, 110,552 chums, 7,120 pinks, and 58,884 silvers by 123 permit holders. The number of permit holders fishing was the highest since 1993. The chum catch was the second highest since 1985. The silver catch was the 13th highest on

The commercial harvest in the Unalakleet subdistrict totaled 90 kings, 258 sockeyes, 34,000 chums, 6,274 pinks and 29,486 silvers caught by 65 permit holders. The number of permit holders fishing was the highest since 1994. The chum catch was the highest since 1992. The silver catch was the 19th highest on record.

The Unalakleet River test fish net was pulled Sept. 7. Catches for the season totaled 132 kings, 2,526 chums, 2,154 pinks, 10 sockeyes and 354 silvers. The Escapement goals for the North River tower are: Kings, 1,200-2,600; thums, no goal established; pinks, 25,000; and silvers, 550-1,100 (aerial survey goal). The NSEDC operates this cooperative project with assis-

The cumulative count through Sept. 8 was 864 kings, 19,898 chums, 123,892 pinks and 3,624 silvers, but this is a minimum count because of problems at the tower. High water made visual counts difficult. In addition, no estimation of passage was made for the 10 days the crew was unable to count during the third quarter of the silver run after high water knocked out the tower. The silver count is well below the numbers that actually passed the tower site. An aerial survey on Sept. 2 confirmed that escapement was made with 898 silvers counted.

An aerial survey estimate of kings on the North River indicates similarities with years when we made escapement. In addition, an aerial survey of the Unalakleet River was similar to counts at the Unalakleet River weir, so we suspect the king estimate from the North River tower was much lower than the numbers of kings that actually passed the tower.

No escapement goals have yet been established for the Unalakleet River floating weir, which was flooded out on Aug. 8, two days before its scheduled closure. The cumulative counts this season were 1,113 kings, 108,377 chums, 365,121 pinks, 185 sockeyes and 10,417 silvers. This was the second year of a cooperative project involving the ADF&G, Native Village of Unable at 11.8 Department Land Management and Management of Unalakleet, U.S. Bureau of Land Management and NSEDC. The commercial harvest in the Shaktoolik subdistrict totaled 40 kings, 68 sockeyes, 25,388 chums, 29 pinks and 15,367 silvers caught by 30 permit holders. The number of permit holders fishing was the second highest since 1994. ## Norton Bay subdistrict

The commercial harvest was 4 kings, 9 sockeyes, 7,558 chums, 652 pinks and 4,836 silvers caught by 12 permit holders. The number of permit holders fishing was the highest since 1993. The chum harvest was the highest since 1985, and the silver harvest was the highest on record.

The number of permit holders fishing was the highest since 1988. The chum harvest was the highest since 1985, and the silver harvest was the third highest on record, trailing only the record catches of the last two years.

Escapement goals at the Kwiniuk River tower are Kings, 300-550; chums, 11,500-23,000; pinks 8,400; Kings, 300-350; cnums, 11,007-25,000; pinks 8,400; and silvers, 650-1,300 (aerial survey goal). Cumulative counts through Sept. 9 are 48 kings, 31,607 chums, 30,005 pinks and 2,613 silvers. Silver escapement is last out of 11 years of counting during silver season, but the aerial survey count of 1,331 silvers did exceed the escapement goal range. This is an ADF&G project with assistance from NSEDC.

The commercial harvest in the Golovin subdistrict totaled 7 kings, 20,075 chums and 859 silvers caught totaled / kings, 20,075 chums and 859 sitvers caught by 13 permit holders. The number of permit holders fishing was the highest since 1988. The chum harvest was the highest since 1988.

Escapement goals at the Niukluk River Tower are: Pinks, 10,500; chums, minimum of 23,000; kings, minimum of 100 (combined Fish River and Boston Creek

The project was pulled on Sept. 7. Cumulative counts through Sept. 6 were 18 kings, 23,616 chums, 15,428 pinks and 2,405 silvers. Silver passage ranked 14th out of 16 years, but the lower end of the escapement goal range was reached. The ADF&G operates this project with assistance from NSEDC.

Subsistence and sport fishing for silvers is closed. No net fishing is allowed in the Nome subdistrict marine waters and fresh waters draining into Norton Sound from Topkok Head to Cape Rodney. No bait is allowed when hook and line fishing. No silvers can be targeted for catch and release fishing. Beginning on Sept. 16, the Nome subdistrict will reopen to net fishing and subsistence fishing for silvers, but sport fishing for silvers will remain closed. Both catch and release fishing for silvers and the use of bait will NOT be allowed. The continued sport fishing restrictions will allow any silvers outside of the subsistence areas listed on the back of the Nome subdistrict subsistence permit to remain protected. Think of it as an investment of silver in the bank with silvers of it as an investment of street in the bank with surveys protected on the spawning grounds and no withdrawals allowed. The payoff will be in 2015 with rate of returns variable by river.

The escapement goals at the Nome River weir are: Chums, 2,900-4,300, and pinks, 3,150 (odd-numbered year). Cumulative counts through Sept. 9 were 11 year). Cumulative counts furnoign sept., 9 were 11 kings, 3.576 chums, 14,394 pinks, 16 sockeyes and 1,266 silvers. The Snake River weir escapement goal is 1,600-2,500 chums. Cumulative counts through Sept. 9 are 1 king, 4,342 chums, 7,010 pinks, 13 sockeyes and 318 silvers. chums, 3,364 pinks, 8,449 sockeyes and 269 silvers.
This year's sockeye salmon run showed improvement compared to the last two years: 953 sockeyes passed through the Pilgrim River in 2009, and 1,654 sockeye salmon passed through in 2010. An aerial survey on Aug. 10 confirmed that escapement was reached with 5,144 sockeye salmon counted. The weir, a cooperative project between ADF&G and NSEDC, was pulled on Sept. 2.

Notez-one permit holders harvested a preliminary total of 264,316 chum salmon in the Kotzebue district this year. The preliminary value of the 2011 Kotzebue salmon fishery was $865,650, similar to the 2010 salmon fishery value of $860,125. This year's ex-vessel value was the highest since 1988

Nuisance musk oxen discussed at city council work session

By Diana Haecker

In response to mounting incidents of musk ox encroaching on people's territories and incidents of dogs being gored by single musk oxen, Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologist Tony Gorn held a presentation at City Hall about ADF&G's latest insights on population numbers and musk ox behavior. The meeting attracted 16 members of the public and council member Mary Knodel. Nome Mayor Denise Michels as well as city manager Josie Bahnke attended.

Gorn's PowerPoint presentation showed something that the audience didn't expect: musk oxen population numbers going down. Gorn said that there are approximately 2,600 musk oxen on the Seward Peninsula and the numbers are going down. The animals' distribution also changed over the years and areas where hunting for musk oxen is restricted, sees more animals than elsewhere.

One slide showed a lot of little circles on the Seward Peninsula marking musk ox herds and a big circle around Nome, where a very large portion of musk oxen have decided to set up camp. Although musk oxen are almost a daily sight for Nomeites, there aren't many of the prehistoric animals around. "We see several red flags if we're looking for population growth," said Gorn. He said that the musk oxen population is actually declining and that the mature bull to cow ratios have declined.

"The most alarming thing that we found is the natural mortality of cows," Gorn said. The mortality of adult cows is between 4 to 23 percent, Gorn said. And that is a very high number. He also pointed out that hunters are factors in the change in population structure as he noted that people – to 90 percent – kill the biggest bull in the herd.

"We can't just keep killing all the big bulls," Gorn said.

Gorn said that musk oxen feel safe around buildings, are finding good browse and a predator-free environment in Nome. "For a musk ox, life's pretty good around town," said Gorn. But how do people feel about that? "The perception up to this point was that we enjoy wildlife," Gorn said. "But there is a growing segment in town that wants the local musk ox population reduced." Fish and Game responded to this request by opening a hunt in the area that was formerly closed to hunting. The hunt will be from January 1 to March 15.

The questions that people wanted answered though is what to do to keep muskoxen out of one's property and away from one's dogs. Gorn suggested to keep grass down, clear brush around the house, and shoot water at them, as they really don't appreciate getting wet. He also suggested that dog owners consider putting up a chain linked fence around their pets. This triggered a comment from Mike Quinn, who directed his question to city officials, saying "Do you want Nome to be a city that asks its citizens to spend a significant amount of money to protect their

An Icy View resident said that ever since the musk oxen started hanging out in the area, it depleted the quality of life out there as he can't just let the kids out to play or pick berries unless a grown-up with a gun is standing guard.

John Handeland said he was concerned that musk oxen could cause a major airplane accident, as they sometimes congregate on the airport runway and are hard to see at night as planes are still coming in. He also added that he loves to take visitors out in the country to see the animals. "I think they're too close to town. I also think they're wonderful to look at as long as they are out of town and not behind the AC store or the Sewage Lagoon," Handeland said.

As musk oxen so far have only shown aggressive behavior against dogs, people wondered aloud what threat they pose to people. Musk oxen researcher Claudia Ihl offered an insight that she hasn't heard of a wild musk ox going after people. But she also said that they are impressed with the height of their "opponents" and that would put children at greater danger of being attacked than adults. She also said that musk oxen do give warning signs prior to attacking, but that people probably don't know how to read those signs.

The question of applying the law that allows people to shoot musk oxen in defense of life and property came up and what it could mean if people start firing in neighborhoods. Another comment was if ADF&G is willing to think outside the box and experiment with laying a bear scent perimeter around human settlements, as musk oxen are keenly aware of the danger posed by bears.

Tony Gorn said in the end that he wants to hear from the public because ADF&G is trying to come up with a better management plan for the animals. But he also said that it takes a willing public to work on a solution. "In my recent experience I had to deal with a lady who was very upset but also terribly unwilling to do something," Gorn said. "Nome is at the cross roads and I hope the public will begin to understand that they have to do something too, because we live in musk ox habitat."

The Dock Walk

Harbormaster Joy Baker reports the comings and goings of vessels in and out of the busy Port of Nome. The low water kept most small boats inside the small boat harbor during the early part of last week.

The tugs Fish Hawk and Island Spirit arrived on Monday to load gravel but had to wait out the low water situation and storm conditions north of the Yukon.

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game research vessel Pandalus also stayed in the small boat harbor all week due to low water and then had to wait out this past weekend's storm conditions.

The landing craft Greta arrived on Sept. 7 and on Sept. 9 to take on and deliver cargo for the Kotzebue area.

The Crowley tug Nachik arrived with the 152 fuel barge on Sept. 8 and spent the weekend in Nome to wait out storm conditions.

The sailing vessels Anna from Sweden, Muktuk from Austria and Imvubu from South Africa visited the small boat harbor in Nome over the stormy weekend.

The Alaska Logistics vessel Kaktovik II was in the harbor all week to finish up repairs. They were waiting for the water to come back in order to retrieve the barge vessel that was stranded on the beach at the outer harbor. In the attempt to get the barge inside the harbor, the tug ended up on the armor rock wall and lost about 800 to 1,000 gallons of diesel fuel. (See separate story this issue.)

The United States Postal Service has completed its initial internal study of the 36 Alaska post offices being reviewed for potential closure and has determined 31 of these Alaska post offices will remain open for business. The Wales and White Mountain post offices are on the list to remain open. The internal study was the first step of the USPS process. The 31 post offices removed from further study were determined to be in regions where inclement topography and lack of alternative postal services were available.

Herbert Hoover Paniptchuk, Sr. "Anguyuk, Qaluuraq, Attaman"

Herbert Hoover Paniptchuk, Sr.

August 19, 2011.

Herbert served in the Alaska Territorial Guard from 1942-1947, and also served in the National Guard. He was employed and retired from Northern/Alaska Commercial Company. He also loved to dog mush and was very knowledgeable on reading the weather patterns. Herbert loved his subsistence way of life and was a top-notch expert on gathering plants and hunting animals. He spoke and understood various Eskimo dialects from around the region.

Herbert often retold the story of the time he walked from Bethel to Unalakleet with his brother-in-law Clarence Towarak, Sr., and Raymond Towarak. They lived off of rice and pancakes and whatever the villages fed them. The purpose of their trip was to trap mink near Bethel.

Many students sought to interview him about life, and he willingly obliged. He had humorous nicknames for everyone. When his boys were attending Covenant High, he was an avid #1 Wolverine fan. He took gate at every CHS basketball game when the games were at the CHS gym. He took in many students while they were in attendance at both Covenant High and State School. He treated many dorm students as his own. Beginning in the late 1960s, many showed up at his home to eat the Native food they craved. Up to this day, they are still loyal for what he did for them. He also befriended families who lost their loved ones.

He loved teaching his Native language to many. Herbert opened his house to everyone who needed a place to stay or to eat, even strangers. Lorena and Herbert were foster parents and adopted "papa and tata" to everyone.

Herbert is survived by his wife of 54 years, Lorena Paniptchuk; and children Glenda Toshavik, Martina and Derrick Leedy, Stanton Paniptchuk and companion Jelyn Gaskell, Charlene Fancher, Herbert Jr. and Ida Paniptchuk, Marti and

Bertha Quituvituaq Pootoogooluk

November 1,1933-February 27, 2010

Bertha was born on November 1, 1933 to Teddy and Anna Sockpick. She was raised by her grandmother Nellie Weyiouanna with the help of her aunts and uncles. Bertha and Harvey were married for 42 years. Together they had eight children Hazel, Johnny, Anna, Kara, Charlene and stepchildren Ruth, Evelyn and Alfred. They also raised three of their grandchildren as their own. Bertha died February 27, 2011 surrounded by her loving family.

Bertha attended the Shishmaref School up to the eighth grade. She was so proud finishing a higher grade than her husband. Harvey would make a grocery list then Bertha would look it over and tell him, "Here let me write it; you don't know how to spell the words right,"Then remind him that she went to school up to the eighth grade and they would laugh about it afterwards.

Bertha worked on the first sandbag seawall in the mid 1970s, as a maid for the Shishmaref Native Corporation Hotel, a janitor for the Shishmaref Clinic and as a cook at the school.

Bertha was well known for having strong faith in the Lord. She was often heard singing Gospel music and always listened to Gospel songs on the tape recorder. She would always bring the tape recorder when going out boating or camping.

Bertha enjoyed making parka kuspuks, beading, sewing, mukluks, slippers, crocheting and making knitted socks for the whole family and friends.

Bertha also sewed horn dolls' garments while Harvey carved the horn dolls.

They both enjoyed working together on the dolls they made.

Bertha enjoyed all four seasons of the year. She was a traditional subsistence gatherer and provider and she was very happy to share with her family and friends. Bertha was always happy to go out on the boat in the springtime to follow her husband when he went hunting. She especially enjoyed ice fishing, egg hunting, crabbing, berry picking and camping with family and friends.

She was always willing to share her cooking, baking and Native foods that she prepared. She also made daily phone calls to her family to make sure that they were all right and always check up on her grandchildren and great grandchildren.

Bertha was diagnosed with Parkinson's a couple of years ago, but it didn't stop her from doing the things she loved to do. Bertha's beautiful smile, laughter and stories will be greatly missed by her family and friends.

She enjoyed their company and all the Native foods they brought to her, in return for her generosity, kindness and love for country food. All those she sheltered are sure to miss her, as her family will too. Nora called Ellen one day and she answered by saying "Hi to-morrow," Nora angrily said, "Real bugging." # Cooperation key word during Beringia Days in Nome

Nome took on an international flair as scientists, subsistence hunters and governmental dignitaries from Russia and other parts of the world arrived last week to celebrate the common heritage of Beringia during the Beringia Days International Conference, held from Friday to Saturday evening. The National Park Service and the Institute of the North organized the event that has been in existence since 1997.

The Bering Strait region and the Bering Land Bridge not only attract rrscientists but also became a symbol for renewed cooperation between the U.S. and the Russian Federation after the Iron Curtain fell. The conference brought together scholars from both countries, Native peoples, researchers and representatives of ct governments.

Discussions between politicians, scientists and subsistence hunters attracted a large audience of Nomeites and visitors who packed the Mini Convention Center to the rafters. A youth track was taking place at the same time in other venues.

Panel discussions included the state of current international cooperation in the Bering Strait region, Native observations of environmental changes and marine mammal research on both sides of the Bering Land Bridge. As Charlie Johnson noted during the panel discussion on marine mammal research, it is politics that sometimes stand in the way for folks on both sides of the borders to communicate. "We still have great difficulty in communicating with the people on the other side," Johnson said. "The problem is not between us people, we share the same culture, but the political animosity between the countries of the U.S. and Russia."

But there were also new efforts of political progress noted, as for example a joint statement of U.S. President Barack Obama and Russian Federation President Dmitry Medvedev, signed in May 2011. The statement calls for protection of the shared natural and longstanding cultural heritage of Alaska and Chukotka and deepening relationships.

Írina Ryabukhina, chairwoman of the Sports and Tourism committee of the Chukotkan Autonomous District said through a translator that although there are still sometimes problems with visitations on both sides of the border, the last few years saw huge breakthroughs when it comes to travel between the two

She added that there is big interest to receive Alaskans at Chukotkan boat races and to renew interest in organizing international sled dog races like the Hope race that took mushers from Nome to Anadyr. Discussions during the early panels also touched on the shared dream of a trans-national park bridging the Beringia region.

The Park Service presented several comparisons for a Beringia Park framework and pointed to the possibility of an International Heritage area, an International Park Area or a sister park arrangement.

While protection, scientific cooperation and preservation of culture, language and nature play big in those scenarios, Olga Safonova said that the Chukotkan side already went ahead to discuss several concepts of zoning for the area. She said that they identified four different levels of protection ranging from a full preserve where full protection is afforded to the land, to special protected areas, where some human visiting is allowed, to a recreational and tourism zone and a subsistence zone where hunting and traditional activities are allowed.

Russia has established an Arctic Park and plans to establish 20 more parks in the coming years.

Pat Pourchot, the special assistant for Alaskan affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, applauded the Chukotkans on the zoning initiative. Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell represented the State of Alaska's point of view and said that while the State of Alaska wants to maintain the values of cooperation, it also has a mandate to allow resource development and to provide economic opportunity for Alaskans. "The State of Alaska is cautious about the international park scenario because whenever a project like this comes along, somebody is drawing a line, saying that there shouldn't be any resource development," Treadwell said.

Treadwell also pointed to the pos-

Sweet Medicine: Topical honey may promote wound healing

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Since ancient times, honey has been recognized as an effective treatment for skin infections, ulcers, and burns. Doctors are being re-introduced to this traditional therapy due to the rise in resistant bacteria causing skin infections.

Even when bacteria become resistant to modern medication and topical antiseptics, honey may continue to pack a deadly antibiotic punch and in some cases works faster than current therapies.

Honey is a food, not a drug. Therefore research regarding how well honey works is not generally available. Only a few studies comparing the effectiveness of honey to standard treatments for skin infections have been performed. Researchers who reviewed these studies found that honey consistently decreases the time to healing for minor to moderate skin wounds and burns. Honey may also promote healing in minor cuts, scrapes, and ulcers.

uts, scrapes, and uicers. In a study of the use of honey to treat skin wounds that occur after surgery, topical honey performed better than antiseptic at promoting wound healing.

Honey has several antibacterial qualities that may promote wound healing:

Honey is super-saturated with sugars, which not only makes it tasty, but also makes it very attractive to water. Scientists call this property hyperosmolarity which gives honey a tendency to absorb water from its surroundings. Honey may stop the growth of bacteria by literally robbing the bacteria of water.

Honey also acts as an antiseptic. When honey comes in contact with body fluid in an infected wound, it undergoes a chemical reaction that produces low levels of hydrogen peroxide, the same antiseptic you keep in your medicine cabinet. At low concentrations, hydrogen peroxide produced by the honey will kill bacteria without damaging healthy skin.

Some strains of honey also have phytochemicals that act as an antibiotic even when the honey is very dilute.

It is important to understand that not all honey is made alike. Honeybees make honey from the pollen of different flowering plants and trees. Just as honey from different regions may have varying tastes, honey from different regions likely has different antibiotic qualities.

Though regular honey is considered safe for minor wounds, medical grade honey is available commercially and provides the safest and most reliable option for nationts.

Wound care experts recommend applying honey in the same way any topical antibiotic cream or ointment is applied. The honey may be placed directly to a wound and covered with a bandage, or honey may be applied to the bandage prior to application.

Honey should be considered first aid for minor skin infections only. Any infection, burn, or abscess that is worsening should be evaluated by a doctor.

Just do not be surprised if your doctor recommends a trip to the jams and jelly section of the grocery store for some honey. Science and a few millennia of experience suggest that honey may still have a place in the medicine cabinet.

Saying It Sincerely

By Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member Nome Ministerial Association

Some say the most needed thing in the world today is forgiveness that leads to reconciliation. When we think of the violence, wars, power conflicts, historical enmities, racism in the world and even in our own communities, we certainly yearn for forgiveness and reconciliation.

In my lifetime, one of the public figures who has made an impression upon me in leading the way toward reconciliation despite painful circumstances, is Nelson Mandella.

When he was released from prison Nelson Mandella apparently was filled with anger. After all, he had been imprisoned for more than 20 years because of his work against apartheid in South Africa. He said, "As I walked across the courtyard that day I thought to myself, "They've taken everything from you that matters. Your cause is dead. Your family is gone. Your friends have been killed. Now they're releasing you, but there's nothing left for you out there." And I hated them for what they had taken from me. Then, I sensed an inner voice saying to me, "Nelson! For 27 years you were their prisoner, but you were always a free man! Don't allow them now to make you into a free man, only to turn you into their prisoner!'

Martin Luther said, "Where there is forgiveness, there is life and salvation." I like that quote and have found it true. Forgiveness in relationships between individuals and between whole communities creates the space for new life. Certainly that has been true in South Africa where Mandella went on to be president and intentionally include the group of people who had oppressed the people of color for years. He built coalitions with them because he knew this was the only way toward true freedom and life in his nation.

Biblically I am reminded of the story of Joseph in Genesis. Left for dead by his brothers, he is sold into slavery and taken to Egypt. There he grows in stature and power only to meet up with his brothers a generation later. Now he is in a position to save them because they are hungry and experiencing famine in their land. Though still angry he chooses to forgive them and save their lives: "Do not be afraid. I cannot put myself in the place of God. You intended it for evil, but God turned it to good." (Genesis 50: 19-

This is a poignant message for us as we commemorate the 10th anniversary of the tragedies on Sept. 11, 2001. May we not be filled with fear but work toward things that make for life.

Norton Sound Health Corporation Request for Qualifications

Project: Norton Sound Replacement Hospital Deadline for Qualification Entries: 9/28/2011

I. Solicitation

Norton Sound Health Corporation. (NSHC) is soliciting qualifications from artists to commission three pieces of art for the Nome replacement hospital project. Qualifications may consist of photographs of previous work, a resume, or any other two dimensional material which accurately illustrates the artist's style, including preferred mediums

II. Background and Project Summary

Norton Sound Health Corporation operates an existing 18 bed secondary care hospital serving the entire Norton Sound region. The Indian Health Service (IHS) determined the existing hospital facility is beyond its useful life and in need of replacement. Final planning documents for a new replacement hospital were approved by IHS in 2006 and construction is now underway. The new hospital is on the east side of Nome, approximately two miles from the existing facility. Inpatient, outpatient, and variety of support services will move to the new hospital. Construction will be complete in late 2012

The project budget includes $533,000 for art in the new hospital. Working with the project architect, Kumin and Associates, Inc., (KAI), the NSHC art committee has identified locations for art throughout the facility. Art will consist of transferred pieces from the existing facility, donated work, purchased art from the local community, and commissioned art. This RFQ process is only for the commissioned work.

Listed below are the three areas in the building where commissioned work will be located:

- 1. The first location is above the ground level lobby. An open atrium spanning to the underside of level two offers an idyllic location for a hanging piece. Additional support steel will be installed above the ceiling to increase configuration options.
- 2. The second location is on the North wall of the first floor shared waiting. Three adjacent open walls separated by doorways provide approximately 650 square feet of surface area for customized artwork. Above ceiling electrical J-boxes have been installed to facilitate the addition of accent lighting as needed.
- 3. The third location is on the North wall of the second floor shared waiting in front of the cafeteria. This area provides approximately 300 square feet of highly visible wall space. Above ceiling electrical Jboxes have been installed to facilitate the addition of accent lighting as needed.

III. Selection Process

Submitted qualifications will be reviewed by the NSHC art committee to determine a list of finalists. Those artists selected as finalists, will receive written direction to submit a specific proposal outlining their design concept. Finalists will have 1 month to develop proposals. The NSHC art committee will review the proposals and select three commissioned pieces. Formal contracts will be awarded to the artists within 30 days following selection. Reference paragraph XI of this RFQ for timeline with specific

IV. Selection Criteria

- 2. Appropriateness of the artist's medium, style and previous experience in relation to the project goals and setting.

To be considered, offerors must deliver qualifications to the address below, on or before the deadline, and in the number of copies indicated below. This is not a postmark deadline.

Deadline: Qualifications will be accepted until Wednesday, September 28th, 2011 at 4:00 PM.

The tour will be through an active construction site; appropriate clothing, including closed-toe foot wear, will be required. Hard hats and safety vests will be provided. The tour group will convene in front of the owner's trailer at 1:50 PM. If you plan to attend the tour, notify Michelle Woods at the project office (907) 443-6769. Tour participation is NOT required to submit qualifications.

VII. Theme

The design team and NSHC board envision a facility housing native art reflective of the entire Norton Sound region. The goal is a body of work which highlights the unique traits of each native subculture, but collectively represents the Norton Sound region as a whole.

VIII. History

The new Norton Sound Regional Hospital, in Nome, is located in the Bering Strait region service area. The Bering Strait region is located on the southern coast of the Seward Peninsula in northwest Alaska, 539 air miles Northwest of Anchorage. The region is home to three distinct cultural groups of Eskimo people with the majority of people living in the traditional Inupiat villages of Shishmaref, Diomede, Brevig Mission, Mary's Igloo, Teller, King Island, Solomon, Council, White Mountain, Golovin, Elim, Koyuk, Shaktoolik, and Unalakleet. The St. Lawrence Island Yupik people live in Gambell and Savoonga and have a distinct culture and dialect referred to as Siberian Yupik. The communities of Golovin and Elim are traditionally Unaliq, which is a branch of Central Yup'ik. Stebbins and St. Michael are Central Yup'ik. There are many other distinctions in the region: All but 1 village, White Mountain, are coastal communities; three of the villages are island communities with distinct island hunting and gathering culture. The Yupik people of St. Lawrence Island have the only Eskimo society that is known to be clan based. The villages of Diomede, Gambell, and Savoonga have direct ties to relatives in the Russian Far East.

IX. Other Requirements

There are no restrictions on style of work or materials, but the work must be sturdy and durable with minimal routine maintenance required. This is a seismic occupancy category 4 area, suspended work must confirm to the IBC 2006 building code.

preparing a meal. If our villages were to convert to that type of living, most folks would starve because the cost of shipping and airfare are totally outrageous this affects the cost of the store bought goods. Don't forget that most families in the villages do not have a steady income and subsistence is an absolute must in all the bush communities.

Should drilling be approved it will most likely result in an oil spill at sea. Yes, the oil companies will say they will have the best teams ready and trained for something like this, but man cannot control the currents and the weather.

Alaska can get some nasty weather and in my short time of 40 years as a resident in a village, I have noticed the change in weather from global warming. As a child I would notice how nice the weather would be starting from the spring months to the early fall. The weather would be calm most all day, even into the next day, flat and calm as

That's not the case anymore. It might be calm in the morning but by late morning or early afternoon the winds are already picking up.

Going back to the oil teams being ready for a spill, those teams will not be able to contend with the everchanging weather and the pounding swells that occur in the seas. I am suggesting to all who live in the villages throughout these regions to voice your opinions and try not to depend on our legislators and representatives. There is only so much they can do, and if I am not mistaken, Senator Begich is for opening to drill up north.

Your voices must be heard should you want to keep your life style with subsistence - it's a must to be heard. This world can only take so much. Our world has been raped long enough and the dependence on oil has hurt the atmosphere with the emissions put into the air and causing global warming. Please help this matter and do what is right to keep our life style so that our children do our life style so that our children do not suffer.

Sincerely Lincoln R. Shavings Nunivak, AK

Dear Editor,

The last time GEO (formerly Wackenhut) attempted to build a private prison in Alaska, they encountered more resistance and difficulties then they had anticipated; and at the time, their goal was too limited to justify a greater and more costly ef-

They're back, and this time they appear to have a greater goal, and a plan. This is how it may possibly go: First, they go for the periphery, the things which few will be concerned about, like treatment centers; halfway houses; and service, supply, and maintenance contracts.

A good example is their Seaside Center in Nome. It appears to be managed by GEO Care, a wholly owned subsidiary of GEO.

These periphery things will help to create a dependency type of relationship between GEO and Alaska's Department of Corrections.

Then they will hint at bankrolling a voter's initiative to eliminate the public employee's collective bargaining rights and force the union to the bargaining table.

All of which will help to lay the political foundation for eventually taking over management of Alaska's prisons.

Wayne Calabrese, vice-chairman of the board and president said, "As one of the most diversified companies in our industry, GEO is well positioned..."

GEO's annual revenue is about $1.5 billion, coming from 116 facilities with 78,000 beds, worldwide. They employ over 17,000 people in 27 states and three foreign counties.

Make no mistake, they could pull it off; and once they do, Alaska will be stuck with them, forever!

Dear Editor,

As duck hunting comes around, people need to remember to tell other people where they are headed—it might save their life. Although I understand the reason a person might want to use khaki or white clothes, it might fool another hunter, so make sure you are shooting at another animal instead of someone else. We wouldn't want to lose someone that way.

So, when they talk about expanding the pipeline why don't they consider making a part of it go to Unalakleet? Unalakleet is a hub for surrounding communities. I think it would be a tremendous benefit to our region, and we are almost parallel to Fairbanks on the map. Besides, maybe they'd find other resources along the way.

Although its nice that Bering Air has special rate round-trip tickets for $569 from your village to a village other than Nome, I think the tickets should be refundable under certain circumstances. That is a nice thing, but the tickets are non-refundable, non-transferable, and need to be used within a year. Maybe sometimes someone needs to send for someone else because of a death or something, but they have to try to find more money, because someone else (who has a ticket) cannot transfer it over to the other person-what a deal. Or maybe you end up in an accident and would like to send for someone to help you; you still have to find more money for that.

Don't forget winter is coming, so dress accordingly. Don't be stupid about it; frostbite and freezing to death is a serious subject. Once you get frostbite somewhere it will always be easier to get it back in that place, and if that is the fingers, toes, feet, wherever, it maybe you probably will eventually get that part cut off—better think of it. And remember to tell people where you are headed.

Take care, everyone. Hope you have a good safe winter and school year. Remember-the kids need their beauty sleep, so if you want to party, try to do it where there are no kids and be quiet when you go

Nanooks volleyball sweeps weekend over Barrow and Kotzebue

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Nanooks volleyball team continued its terrific start to the season last weekend winning all three of the matches they played. The Nanooks, who were home for the first time this season, hosted teams from Barrow and Kotzebue who both were strong competitors.

The first game for the Nanooks was last Friday evening against the Barrow Whalers in which the Nanooks won the game in straight sets. However, each set became tougher for the Nanooks in the match as they won. The sets went 25-15, 25-18, and 28-26.

had set and match points to end it earlier, but neither could until the Nanooks finally were able to close it

In the next match a few hours later against Barrow, the Nanooks once again dropped the first set to the Whalers, 25-18, but then came back to win 3 straight sets, 25-18, 25-23, and 25-23. The last set was especially impressive, as the Nanooks were down 10-2 to start the 4th set before coming back strong to close out the match.

Not only did the Nanooks play very strong, but the resiliency they showed in their matches made them

"I think that Barrow came out nervous to start the match, but then they settled down as the match progressed," said Rob Luce, head coach of the Lady Nanooks volleyball team. "They are a very good defensive team and they just played hard," said Luce.

The next day, the Nanooks had to come back for a doubleheader in which they beat the Kotzebue Huskies in the first game and Barrow again in the next match. In the morning match against Kotzebue, the Nanooks struggled early, dropping the first set 25-16. However, they were able to bounce back and win the next three straight sets, 26-24, 25-12, and 32-30. The last set of this match was thrilling. Both teams able to dominate.

"We knew with the deficit we had, we couldn't get it all back at once, and had to take it two or three points at a time," said Luce. "Once we got it close again, we knew that we wanted to close it out and not take it to a fifth set.'

With the weekend results, the Nanooks now move to 5-0 for the season and continue to play well as a team.

"We communicated well and we were really aggressive, hitting really hard," said Taylor Pomeranz, junior starter for the Nanooks.

The Nanooks get back into action this weekend as they face Bethel Friday and Saturday at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks.

No firm decision made on fluoride

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council shelved a decision on medicating citizens who use the City's water supply - sort of. A couple of members of the panel want more facts on the effects of fluoride and public input; others want fluoride now.

When an official resolution from Nome Joint Utility System board calling for a halt to fluoridating the water supply came up on the Monday Council agenda, Councilwoman Mary Knodel said she would like to have some hard numbers on the issue before a decision was made on whether to reinstate the practice. She asked if the information on fluoride dug up by a commission in Fairbanks could be put before the public for public comment. "I find the Fairbanks study very convincing," Knodel said. Councilman Stan Andersen suggested the issue be put on the City Web site to inform the public.

Fairbanks and Juneau have ceased to put fluoride in their water supplies. NJUS, operators of the municipal potable water coming out of home faucets, has not been fluoridating water for several months, according to utility manager John Handeland, because the fluoride machine has been broken.

Registered dental hygienist Jane Murphy, who has seen a few teeth, during citizen comment period gave anecdotal testimony that when she came to work in Nome, she encountered six-year-olds with "bombed out" molars, but after fluoride was put in the water [1989] she saw newly erupted six-year-olds with molars that were healthy and strong, and later, a high school graduating class with teeth healthy and strong.

When do we have to do what other places do," Murphy said, apparently referring to Fairbanks, but then urging the City to continue to be one of a group of communities in Alaska that put fluoride in their water sup-

In fact, according to data from the World Health Organization, the number of dental cavities has gone down dramatically in Western countries that fluoridate citizens through water supply. However, it has also declined

Coast Guard concerned over shipping traffic, oil and gas exploration

By Diana Haecker

As crews of the tug boats Sinuk and Siku worked feverishly to regain control over a 173foot fuel barge loaded with 140,000 gallons of diesel and gasoline that drifted in heavy seas dodging the Diomede islands, Cape Prince of Wales and Fairway Rock, US Coast Guard Captain Adam Shaw gave a synopsis of his concerns regarding increased maritime traffic to the joint boards of the Norton Sound Health Corporation and Kawerak Inc.

Shaw is the Chief of Prevention in the Seventeenth Coast Guard district, Alaska, and his job is to figure out how the Coast Guard is going to fulfill its several missions in a vast area where open water has replaced solid multi-

Shaw rattled off statistics that show an upward trend in terms of increasing ship traffic, while neither federal nor state agencies are responding to the signs of the time.

Bering Strait transits increased from 245 crossings in 2008 to more than 325 crossings, and cargo operations increased. Single-hulled barges worry Shaw as does increased cruise ship traffic.

The mineral riches of the North and offshore potential for oil and gas fields invite more shipping traffic as more and more sea ice recedes

Oil and gas explorers like Shell and ConocoPhillips gear up for exploratory drilling to start next summer in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas. And while all that is going on, the Russians don't sleep either and bump up marine traffic on their side of the international dateline as well.

Shaw said as the ice recedes, the 11 missions of the Coast Guard - ranging from homeland security, border patrol, enforcing fishing regulations, conducting search and rescues, among others - now have to be met in the uncharted regions of the Arctic. "But we don't know the perintendent Rob Picou challenged the joint boards of NSHC and Kawerak to do what they can to help minimize the student drop out rate, to maximize attendance and to help BSSD to come up with a strategy on how to keep kids in school.

Picou showed the picture of one student who was an excellent learner. Gifted at finding solutions. Loved to learn. But hated to go to school. These are the kids we're losing, Picou said.

Picou presented discouraging statistics, prefaced by the sentence "the brutal facts without losing hope." Here are the facts: The Bering Strait school district's 2011 graduation rate was 52 percent.

At the high school qualifying exam, only 54 percent of the students were proficient in reading, 61 percent in writing and 64 percent in math. In terms of attendances, only the schools at White Mountain, Golovin and Unalakleet exceed the attendance goal set for 92 percent. All other schools are below, with Savoonga, Gambell and Wales trailing the pack at an attendance rate of 81.9 percent and below.

Picou identified that one of the keys to success would be early childhood education. "If a child is not reading or writing at grade level by third grade, it puts them further and further behind and makes it harder to catch up," Picou said. "We need the voice of this body to tell Alaska state legislators to fund early childhood education."

He said what is needed is nothing short of a completely restructured high school system, a commitment to early childhood literacy and a focused, courageous leadership.

Picou said that the federal No Child Left Behind Act has not been kind to rural Alaska. It eliminated

Dear Editor,

I just moved back to my old hometown of Nome, and some of the things I see are not that great.

One thing is why does everyone have to collect old cars on their lots? Don't they know they are a hazard to the owner and the public? If someone crawls into an old car, and freezes or gets hurt, it is the homeowner's fault.

Two: Why can't people teach their children, or watch over them so that they don't get in other people's yards and think they have the right to play with anything there, or open gates and let out pets.

Children walking down streets should be taught to walk on the side. then there is an injured or dead person to deal with.

the post office. When I inquire so as to let traffic through and avoid getting run over. People around here have an idea of how traffic rules in Nome work, but when they go to a city like Anchorage or Fairbanks, they get run over due to the fact they believe the driver is watching out for them. Drivers in big cities have the idea that people know the right-ofway rules, and just keep driving, and

And the worst thing is the threetiered parking, especially in front of about it, everyone seems to pass the buck on who is supposed to ticket the double or triple parker. Now that is fine until someone gets killed or badly hurt in this practice.

Thank you and have a great day. Ann Whipple Nome, AK

Dear Editor and Readers:

In recent months BSNC Land Department has received calls from concerned community members and shareholders regarding the unauthorized excavation of artifacts from Village Corporation lands and Native allotments. While such digging has been ongoing for several decades, the recent spike in the number of reports gives us cause for concern. Most of the incidents have occurred on lands in the Teller, Brevig Mission, and Cape Douglas/Cape Woolley areas. Federally owned lands, Village Corporation lands, and Native allotments have all fallen prey to what can only be called "looting."

We could use more politically correct terms such as "recreational archaeology," "unauthorized excavation," or even "subsistence digging." However the fact remains that individuals are gaining personal profit from the removal of a non-renewable resource at the expense of shareholders, landowners, and future generations. It is illegal on Federal and State lands. It is illegal on Native allotments. It is illegal on lands owned by BSNC. And people may believe differently, but it is also illegal on village corporation lands unless a village corporation explicitly permits such activity. Do all of the shareholders of a village corporation accept that the objects and villages of their ancestors are being removed, include an address and phone number. Thank yous and

The state wants to drill for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and the feds want to drill offshore in the Arctic Ocean and Chukchi Sea. Meanwhile the Pebble Mine folks tell us they will bring salvation by reciting the jobs mantra. To make the drilling and mining happen the government is streamlining the permitting process. What they mean by streamlining is in reality pulling all the teeth out of the environmental protection regulations — slick move by the snake oil salesmen. This comes on the heels or the governor's dismantling of the Coastal Zone Management Program. The oil and mining companies really have the politicians in their pockets.

Rural Alaskans need to watch our backs and we don't have many friends in urban parts of the state. Anchorage seems to think there is so much empty wasteland in the Bush that we won't notice the environmental disasters. Alaska needs to not be too proud to learn from the mistakes of other parts of the world. We don't have the technology or the infrastructure to protect our fragile ecosystems on the tundra or the ocean. When (not if) a spill happens our plants and animals will be dead. People who live off the land or sea will have their livelihood disappear. A billion dollar fishery could go belly up. Not a pleasant thought. Remember the Exxon Valdez mess at Prince William Sound? We came close last week when a barge broke loose near Wales. We were lucky it didn't spill. Do we remember the BP massive spill in the Gulf of Mexico? Do we want to risk our precious marine life to the greed and carelessness of the oil companies? Do we think they really care about us? If there is an accident in our northern waters we have no way to do rescue or clean up. There are no ice free ports, no ports with any capacity to respond rapidly, and no ships to break through the

We are the ones who will have to suffer the impact of a spill or disaster at sea or on the tundra. We are also in the position of having few numbers and not a very loud voice to complain. Many of our elected officials can only hear the sound of money. All of us in rural Alaska have to use our power to be stewards of our environment. We need to keep informed and maintain vigilance to protect our part of planet earth. - N.L.M.-

Arctic," said Shaw. "We would like to find out what you know that we don't know.

Input from the locals is needed, Shaw said. He said he is worried about vessel traffic safety, the environment and subsistence users.

shipping traffic, the Coast Guard is engaging the Department of Commerce, the State Department and the Department of Homeland Security. among others. Negotiations have started with the Russians and the Arctic Council this spring signed an agreement between the Arctic nations to cooperate in Search and Rescue operations. But of immediate concern is the exploratory drilling prospect that could begin as early as next summer.

Asked what the plans are to mitigate the fact that there is no infrastructure in place to prepare for accidents at sea, drilling accidents or oil spill mitigation, Shaw said, "There aren't any plans."

The joint board members of the federally recognized tribes in the Nome, Bering Strait and Norton Sound area know that increased shipping is one of the many climatechange-induced challenges to be contended with. But while the Coast Guard and Captain Shaw recognize the lack of national, state and regional preparedness and the slow reaction time from federal and state institutions, local communities fear the worst.

Patrick Omiak, Sr. from Little Diomede commented that he is worried about how the increased shipping traffic, the noise and the lights. would affect the migration of the marine mammals.

A comment from Wales was that the ocean is the locals' grocery store and there is no stopping the onslaught of traffic. Merlin Koonooka of Gambell said that the narrow Bering Strait is where most of the marine mammals pass through on their migratory routes. "I worry that the traffic may deflect the path of the whales," Koonooka said. "They migrate twice a year and we're worried about noise, discharge and air pollution where all these animals pass through. I worry about the long term impact of this.'

Robert Keith praised the outreach effort of the Coast Guard to present their clear and concise report to the joint boards. "We need to be advocating for infrastructure," Keith said. "The USA and Alaska are not responding according to the need and to what's going on. The individual villages need to be screaming at the Congressional delegation."

Austin Ahmasuk also commented that it is his observation that oil and gas engagements with the public are strongly industry-driven. "I could see a great benefit if the Coast Guard would be a mediator between the industry and the tribes," Ahmasuk said.

The Coast Guard is preparing a Port Access Route Study to evaluate if there is a need to modify current vessel routing and if there is the need for creation of new vessel routing measures in the Bering Strait. The goal of the study is to reduce the risk of marine casualties and increase the efficiency of vessel traffic in the area. The recommendations of the study may influence future rulemaking or international agreements.

The document outlining the study's premises says that the Arctic Council's 'Arctic Marine Shipping Assessment' noted both the sparse nature of aids to navigation in the United States Arctic as well as the absence of vessel routing measures in the Bering Strait.

According to the AMSA study, significant increases in shipping are not expected in the near term, but the U.S. Coast Guard wants to be prepared, "so that essential safeguards are in place in advance of any future shipping increase.'

Barge caught after drifting loose in Bering Strait

By Diana Haecker

Amid heavy seas and strong winds, a village fuel delivery barge became disconnected from its tugboat near Cape Prince of Wales last week and was adrift for almost 24 hours. A Crowley barge loaded with 140,000 gallons of diesel fuel and gasoline was separated from its tugboat Sinuk last Tuesday afternoon.

Crowley manager Alex Sweeney said that the tow bridles broke loose due to bad weather. The 173-foot barge was en route from Point Hope to Port Clarence to conduct the last fuel deliveries before winter. The crew of the 82-foot tug Sinuk notified the Coast Guard at 6:23 p.m. on Tuesday that the barge broke free in heavy weather. Reportedly, the wind blew out of the northeast at 35 to 40

The Coast Guard station in Kodiak dispatched a HC-130 Hercules airplane crew on Wednesday morning to conduct an over flight of the tug and barge. From Nome, a second Crowley tugboat, the Siku, was dispatched to assist the Sinuk in catch-

The aircrew arrived on scene at about 9:40 a.m. on Wednesday. At that point, the barge was 11 miles north of Wales in the Bering Strait.

The Coast Guard reported that winds decreased to 27 mph and wave action was at 12-foot to 15-foot seas. The crews of the Crowlev tugs Siku and Sinuk managed to reestablish the tow on Wednesday 4:35 p.m. The tugs brought the barge into Port Clarence on Wednesday evening. No injuries or damages were reported.

NJUS lets fly an awaited anti-fluoride resolution

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Joint Utility Board moved 4-1 to send a resolution to Nome Common Council expressing a desire to cease the practice of putting fluoride in Nome's municipal domestic water supply. The Council did not act on the board's resolution Monday.

Three board members, Fred Moody, Carl Emmons and the president, Berda Willson, have called for an end to fluoridation for several months. At the most recent utility board meeting Sept. 20, the panel demonstrated the open discussion that is the foundation of sunshine laws, allowing the public to watch the debate and decision making process.

Willson has asked for facts from proponents of fluoridation, including Mark Kelso, DDS, head of Norton Sound Health Corp. dental services.

Kelso sent a letter that provided pro-fluoride talking points. Countless studies in the past 55 years show that fluoride makes the teeth more resistant to decay, especially if it is in a low-level amount in water during the formative years of tooth development—an intake of fluoride that differs from that present in toothpaste, mouth rinses, etc., in that it is incorporated throughout the whole tooth rather than just bathing the exterior.

Kelso counseled on gathering information from Web sites from antifluoride interest groups, then cited a dental profession support group, the American Dental Society as an authority for fluoridation.

Willson said she noticed in Kelso's letter that he compared fluoride in water to iodized salt.

"The addition of fluoride to water supplies to improve public health is of the same concept as adding iodine to salt and fortifying cereals, fruit juices and other products with vitamins," Kelso's letter said. Fluoride is nothing more than an element that has been shown to prevent dental problems when present in an ideal quantity, he said.

Choice is a key consideration in comparing these practices to fluoridation of water, Willson said.

"You can buy non-iodized salt, but there is no choice with fluoridated water unless you buy special water for a baby. You salt or don't salt baby food. It's your prerogative, but with fluoridated water you don't have a choice," Willson said.

White Alice cleanup done for the year

Man found dead on beach

Tommy Soolook, 43, was found unresponsive on the beach behind the Mini-Convention Center at 5:21 a.m. Saturday Sept. 24. Nome Police Department and Volunteer Ambulance Service responded. He was taken to Norton Sound Hospital where attempts to revive him were unsuccessful.

Soolook had consumed vast quantities of alcohol. No foul play is suspected and next of kin have been notified. Nome Police Sgt. Byron Red-burn says Soolook is from Little Diomede and had been in Nome since May 2010 and has had numerous contacts with NPD.

The Air Force cleanup of contaminated soil at the White Alice antennas on top of Anvil Mountain is nearly finished, and the cleanup crew demobilized for the year, reports Steve Hunt, Air Force project manager.

The Air Force's cleanup crew completed the removal of the polychlorinated biphenyl-contaminated soil. "We excavated and transported outside about 9.25 million pounds of contaminated material," said Hunt. The "dirty dirt" is on its way to a facility in Oregon that is permitted to dispose of hazardous waste.

But with the removal of the dirty soil, the cleanup is not done yet. Next year the crew will have to continue to work on removing the asbestos panels from the towers. Hunt reports that the cleanup crew completely removed the asbestos panels from the southwest tower and next summer work will continue on the three remaining towers.

The charitable organizations in Nome exist to do good in the community. They often supply a quiet army of volunteers and the funding intended to make life better for all. They, if anyone, should be treated fairly by the City of Nome as far as assessed taxes are concerned.

The main funding source for charities in Nome is the business of selling pull-tabs.

Here is the information on the back of the pull-tab display sheet for a common pull-tab sold here. Please look closely at the type in bold. Remember these figures vary depending on the pull-tab game being used.

18 winners	$250.00
2 Winners	$100.00
10 Winners	$20.00
2 Winners	$10.00
1,110 Winners	$1.00
Last Sale	$250.00
Total Payout	$6,330.00
Total Payout Ideal Profit
	$6,330.00

Tickets

8,001

Ideal Profit plus Total Payout = the number of tickets.

$1,671.00 plus $6,330.00 = 8,001 Tickets

The number of tickets and the 79.1% mandated payout is not considered by the State of Alaska as taxable. I'll prove this point later.

The true purchase price of the above game of pull-tabs is the Ideal Profit. In other words, if Joe Pull-tab decides to sit down and purchase all the pull tabs from the above game it would ultimately only cost Joe $1,671.00 to do so. This is no different than Joe purchasing a pair of $42.00 earrings from the Arctic Trading Post. (She has great coffee.) The $1,671.00 and the $42.00 are the correct taxable amounts on which the City can assess the 5% sales tax.

The City of Nome's 5% sales tax on Nome's pull-tabs is currently incorrectly configured to be applied to the 8,001 number of tickets instead of the actual purchase price, the Ideal Profit.

The City of Nome improperly taxing the charities leaves the city making more money than the charities, because the city is actually collecting a tax of 24%, not 5%.

Here is my example:

$1,671.00 Payment from the Pull Tab Vendor (The Ideal Profit)

$300.13 Cost of pull tabs $250.00 + 3% State Gambling Tax $50.13

$501.30 30% fee from Vendor for distributing the pull-tabs $167.10 10% All other fees. Accountant, Manager, Misc.

-$400.05 City Sales Tax (5% x 8,001 tickets) or $400.05/$1,671.00= 24%

Total $302.42 Money left for the charity

If this hits you as a little outrageous, well it is, and it should. How would you like a sales tax of 24%?
Below is the proper taxation by the City of Nome on pull-tab money. $1,671.00 Payment from the Pull Tab Vendor

$300.13 Cost of pull tabs $250.00 + 3% State Gambling Tax $50.13 $501.30 30% fee from Vendor for distributing the pull-tabs $167.10 10% All other fees. Accountant, Manager, Misc.

-$83.55 City of Nome 5% sales tax (5% x $1,671.00)

Let's see!

Incorrect $400.05 versus correct $83.55

(Please bow your head. A short moment of silence is requested at this time in honor of the unexpected but immediate retirement of the City of Nome's Gold Abacus.)

Remember before where I mentioned the State of Alaska does not consider the number of tickets or the pull-tab payout as taxable. Here's the proof.

Look closer at the details of how the state assessed the State Gambling Tax below.

3% of what? Not the 8,001 number of tickets, or the payout of 79.1%, but the Ideal Profit of $1,671.00.

$3\% \times $1,671.00 = $50.13.$

Which entity is incorrectly assessing tax on the charitable organizations? Is it the State of Alaska who uses the Ideal Profit or is it the City of Nome who uses the number of tickets in each game? Normally City governments follow the lead of the state on tax matters. Why isn't the City of Nome following suit and only taxing the Ideal Profit?

The following quotation is from a letter from 1988 Commissioner of Revenue, Hugh Malone to the acting Alaska Chairman of The House Judiciary Committee, The Honorable John Sund. The purpose of the letter was to guide the Alaska legislature on managing gaming activities, etc.

2nd Paragraph:

"The basic idea of allowing gambling for eleemosynary purposes is the heart of the law. With the present level of activity and resources, and the present state of the law we cannot be reasonably certain that the right amount of money is going to the right place."

Mr. Malone is saying charities should receive the largest portion of the gaming proceeds, as that is why the gaming for charities was established in the first place. And that, it must be guarded against that the charities end up not receiving the most benefit from the proceeds.

Instead of the Nome charities receiving the greatest amount of the money from the profits from gambling, as was the original intent of charitable gaming, the charities in Nome are receiving the least. If The City of Nome were not over taxing its own charities, this would not be the case. The beneficiaries would be in this order: the charities, the vendor, and last the City of Nome.

Which seems more in line with the intent of the current practice of the State of Alaska and the clarification of the intended use of gaming funds by Mr. Malone?

A charity getting $302.42 from a box of pull tabs while the City claims $400.05 or as charitable organizations, the State of Alaska, and the 1988 Commissioner of Revenue all agree on: The charity gets $618.92, the vendor gets $501.30 and the City gets their 5% of the Ideal Profit or $83.55.

The charitable organizations ultimately spend their money on good deeds in the community and region. The City should be happy to correct this taxation error, as they are going to collect 5% from the $618.92 when it's spent in the community multiple times doing good deeds. Often the money these charities spend keeps the City from having to pick up the tab. How can the City Council members object to changing their overly aggressive tax interpretation for charitable gaming so it accurately represents the true financial nature of: gaming, charitable organizations and the wishes of the State of Alaska? According to the 1988 Commissioner of Revenue, charities should be receiving the largest portion of gaming proceeds.

Hopefully the council will take a close look at what is going on and change the 24% tax on our charities. Please feel free to pull the ultimate RIPPIE and respectfully let your council members know how you feel.

2) How can we get more citizens involved with the city government?

Being involved with city government over the years, I have come to find it is a thankless job, you are not always going to please everyone. One has to look at the whole picture of what is the best for the community. We are very lucky to live in such a great first class city, the citizens of which have come to expect a lot from city services. How to get more citizens involved in city government has been the question for many years. People need to step up to the plate if they care about Nome's future. The opportunity is there to serve on different boards and commission and voice concerns. I'm in favor of term limits for city elected positions; this would give everyone an opportunity to run for

3) Do you think council members should be on the planning and other advisory boards that make recommendations to the Nome Common Council for approval?

Current city ordinance No. 334, Article II Section 12 10.040, states, "Any Nome City Voter is eligible to be appointed as a commissioner. NO person shall be ineligible solely because he or she holds an elected position. A commission member who ceases to be eligible to be a city VOTER immediately forfeits his or her office as a commissioner." This ordinance was amended in 1993. I do not have a problem with anyone serving on the planning commission or advisory board making recommendations to the common council. The council is made up of six members and it takes four votes to approve a recommendation. There have been a few council members that have served on either the planning commission or port commission, I being one, seated currently on the Port Commission at appointment of the mayor.

4) How can we make Nome a more livable town?

There is no place like Nome. Being a life-long resident I have seen a lot of upgrades over the years.

We continue to strive to make this community a better place. Water, sewer, roads, ports have come a long way and still continue to happen. All of them are very important to the well-being of each community member Citizens should take pride and join a volunteer group of their choice. It is the citizens who make Nome a better place. Taking pride volunteering or getting involved gives back to the community in many ways, which also helps make Nome the best place to live. For the last 28 years I have served with both fire and ambulance departments. These two groups of men and women are dedicated to the community of Nome and when the chips are down, you can count on them to come through night or day, rain or shine. They are a first class act for a first class city, and it is a privilege to serve alongside of each and every one of these members.

Let them know that it is their government and they will be considered in the decisions that are being made.

3) Do you think council members should be on the planning and other advisory boards that make recommendations to the Nome Common Council for approval?

No.

4) How can we make Nome a more "livable" town?

The city government needs to redo the ordinance on the sales tax, and exempt taxes from basic food items, home heating fuel, and our utility bills. The city government should work to make the cost of living easier for the folks in Nome.

Nome Common Council Seat A:

Mary Knodel Nikolai A. Ivanoff

Mary Knodel (incumbent)

1) Please tell us about your background and why voters should cast their vote for you.

I have lived in Nome for 41 years and have raised our family here. We have owned and operated the Arctic Trading Post for over 35 years. I have served on the Nome Common Council, the Nome School Board, The Norton Sound Health Corporation Board, the Library/Museum commission, the Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors, the Nome Visitors Association and the Nome Centennial Committee. I have been actively involved over the years in many youth programs and charities. I love Nome and the people in Nome and the region. I have done my best to make Nome a safer place for all and have tried to promote the growth of Nome. I respect all people and their views and ideas and do what I feel is best for all of Nome.

2) How can we get more citizens involved with the city government?

Having served on the City Council for the past years and the Nome School Board prior to that, I feel that Nome is involved in the politics. The opinions of the people of Nome have been heard, and I have passed those concerns on to the Council and before that the School Board. As far as people running for office, it is a personal choice. It does require time and effort to be prepared and time to attend the many meetings.

3) Do you think council members should be on the planning and other advisory boards that make recommendations to the Nome Common Council for approval?

I see no problem with council members serving on commissions and boards. In discussion it is often helpful to have someone who attended the meeting and can communicate the wishes or concerns of the commissions.

4) How can we make Nome a more "livable" town?

How can we make Nome a more livable place? I guess if I had a crystal ball I would have all the right answers, but I don't, so I guess pride in who we are and where we live is the best answer. Don't tolerate the things that make it hard to live here. Find solutions to the problems. Support those who try to improve the community. More affordable housing is probably the largest problem right now. The problem of the homeless and the public inebriates is also concerning. I don't think our children should be exposed to the mess and the language that comes from the inebriates on the streets. Nome is the best place to live and raise a family.

1) Please tell us about your background and why voters should cast their vote for you.

I was born on November 7, 1950 in a foreign country (Russia, Siberia). I am a U.S. citizen through naturalization, married, have two children: a son, daughter and three grandsons. Since 1976 I have been employed by several exploration and mining companies. I have a Master's degree in geology.

Since 1993 I have lived in Nome and from 1995 worked for Alaska Gold Company, then from 1999 for NovaGold Resources Inc.

My wife Svetlana is a geologist too, but after 36 years working for one exploration company, in 2008 she retired and now is just helping me, my daughter and grandsons. She is doing a very important job, because stability and support of each another in our family is our first priority.

Both my children are doing well, respect parents/country where they living and follow traditional family

Our family in the past was suffering from many problems, including separation for many years, some immigration too, but we survived because many people from Nome, the state and of course from AGC/NovaGold helped us. I am so glad to be part of the Nome mining community and will support any projects to improve life in our community now and for future generations.

So! I am a very open, enthusiastic person, know how to treat, respect people, have multicultural experiences and can bring something new to Nome community, because I well know the mining and real estate business and also what is needed for our community for the next 10-15 years.

I am not going to do any campaign, promote myself or try say I am best, just want to introduce myself, my idea and people will decide to elect me or not.

2) How can we get more citizens involved with the city government?

The best and right way to involved citizens in city government is for them to attend city council meetings, bring some comments and have public control of city government activity

3) Do you think council members should be on the planning and other advisory boards that make recommendations to the Nome Common Council for approval?

Absolutely not, because this is "pure" conflict of interest and everybody in Nome well understands this. City council members have plenty to do and no reason to hold another position. I am not sure why this is happening in Nome and why council members are accepting another positions. We have many good, respectable people in Nome and they can fill any position, if these seats will be open.

4) How can we make Nome a more "livable" town?

Nome is a unique, multicultural town with a rich mining history, and we have everything that is needed for a normal life except a low cost of liv-

If we restore full scale placer mining business, tourism, modify the port facility and provide a station for coast guard and oil exploration company, we'll be OK, because a lot people will be working on high paying jobs, renting apartments, hotels will be full

Hope it will happen in the near future and I'll be happy to support all this activity from an elected official position.

We have everything in Nome to make this happen.

Mayor
Denise Michels
incumbent, unopposed

1) Please tell us about your motivation to run for Mayor again and why voters should cast their vote for

First of all I want to thank the citizens of Nome for their support and input to help create positive working relationships with local, state and federal officials resulting in funding of infrastructure needs such as the new museum.

My strongest motivation is a unified vision that we all live here and we all want the best for our community and future generations. We continue to engage with the private, public, state and federal government to identify needs and barriers, access resources, and finally, implement the needed changes – all with input from the public. Most importantly we need to continue our work toward building our infrastructure for safety and environmental protection while balancing sustainable development. I provide the positive attitude and professionalism representing the City of Nome and would appreciate your vote to continue the work.

2) What are presently Nome's challenges and opportunities?

Again, the biggest opportunity on the horizon for the City of Nome is the opening of the Arctic which will result in: community and economic development; educational opportunities; research and science activities; and ultimately, intermodal creation with the port, airport and a western corridor from the Interior. As your Mayor, I continue to capitalize and promote Nome, because of our strategic location in the Bering Sea/Norton Sound. As a regional hub we have made strides in advocating our infrastructure needs, and I will continue to work further to promote Nome's businesses that support those needed services.

Locally, the biggest challenge is to keep our property and sales tax at the lowest possible rates, while at the same time, providing the best services we can for our citizens. We need to look at opportunities to lower the high cost of energy, and it will require a mix of options.

Other challenges we face are social service issues that include the need for a detox center and changing the social norms about alcohol and domestic violence. We also must continue to support education while we all battle the high costs of operating schools in rural Alaska.

3) What could be done to engage more citizens in affairs concerning the city?

The City of Nome does the following to keep citizens engaged: posts meeting notices, advertises and provides public announcements. The City holds work sessions and public hearings on issues brought before the council and provides opportunities for public input. The Council meetings are aired on the local radio and televised for the public.

This year with the upgrade of our website, there is a section for the public to email recommendations for improvement. We also include additional outside links.

As citizens of this wonderful community, it is our responsibility to stay involved and be engaged in the public process and provide correct information so the policy makers have all pertinent information when making decisions

Thank you for this opportunity. As a proud citizen of Nome, I have been honored to serve as your Mayor, and I would appreciate your vote so that we can continue making progress.

School Board Seat A: Marie Tozier Jennifer Reader

Marie Tozier incumbent

1) Tell us about your background and why you decided to run for office again.

My name is Marie Tozier, I am a Class of '89 NBHS Nanook Alumni, and graduate of UAF-Northwest Campus. I have served on the Nome Board of Education for one year. I am running for re-election to continue making positive changes for our students. During my brief tenure I have supported the Read90 Goal; worked on school improvement plans; supported key aspects of the Strategic Plan, including the Teacher's Cultural Camp; and voiced local concerns in order to increase the success of our educational system.

I have a vested interest in NPS. My husband, Tok, and I have seven children who are enrolled in NBHS Extensions and are active in sports and school activities. My family is from Nome. I am the daughter of John Garrison and the late Laraine Garrison; and the granddaughter of Dan and Ethel Karmun. I believe that we can improve school performance by encouraging more local involvement within and parental support outside of school.

2) What would you do to improve the working relationship between the school board, the administration and the community?

The school board has a good working relationship with the administration and the community. Improvement needs to be made in the working relationship between the schools (including administration) and the community. The school board can help to foster an atmosphere of trust and problem solving between parents, community members, and the schools by addressing concerns and helping administration to understand where those concerns stem from. One of the greatest hindrances to problem solving and moving forward is the inability to follow through on needed changes and the tendency to over-politicize when conflicts arise. We should all feel welcome to address concerns without fear of reprisal.

It is disheartening to know that parents do not feel welcome in the schools. I have been an advocate for students and parents. I have and will continue to uphold the processes that allow students, parents, and employees to address their concerns and work towards resolution and positive outcomes for the schools. I will continue to foster an atmosphere that welcomes input from all, and a working relationship that encourages members of the community to bring not only their concerns, but also their ideas to improve our schools.

3) What is your vision for the Nome Public Schools system in the next 10 years?

Although it looks as if the No Child Left Behind testing requirements may not be around in ten years, I believe that NPS should strive to diminish the discrepancy between Alaska Native student proficiencies and Caucasian student proficiencies. NPS has begun to address this situation by initiating a reading goal, Read90, which I believe will have a great influence on our student's scholastic abilities. To continue on a path of improvement, NPS must address the problem of parents' not feeling welcome in the schools. This has a direct impact on overall parental involvement and student performance. We must understand that this is a historical problem; no one wants to single out any one person, teacher, or administrator. Rather, we need to address the atmosphere of our schools. These needs are supported by data.

The recent School Climate and Connectedness survey revealed three areas of needed improvement.

- 1. Parents do not feel welcome.
- 2. Students feel bullied.
- 3. Regardless of an overall positive feeling about school, Alaska Native students are not meeting proficiency standards.

If we truly want to see a change in our schools, we need to honestly and respectfully address these issues. We cannot continue to brush aside parental concerns. We cannot ignore the fact that an institution that we entrust with our children, is leaving them behind.

Alaska Natives face the highest suicide rates in Alaska, a high rate of alcoholism and resulting legal problems, the highest rates of domestic violence, and the highest rates of high school dropouts. If we want to change the direction that our young people are taking, we must have the courage to address the problems that we see.

Our schools should be springboards for positive, healthy living. We can do our part by taking active roles and supporting our students through academic excellence. We can invite new school personnel into our community and encourage them to learn about our traditions. And then we will realize that it is our responsibility to keep the schools accountable to the people of Nome.

We must show our children that we want the best for them: voice your concern, step out—take action, find a way to become involved. I envision a school system that honors the individual, embraces culture, and prides itself in expecting academic results from each of its students.

Jennifer Reader challenger

1. Tell us about your background and why you decided to run for office?

My name is Jennifer Reader and I am the proud mother of two current Nome-Beltz High School students, three alumni and another to start school in the next four years. I retired from the Alaska Army National Guard after 20 years as a Human Resource Specialist in 2009. I worked for the Nome Public School District as the Quality Schools Coordinator in 2006 and was hired as the assistant secretary for the next school year. Three years later (after a recall to active duty for the military) I was hired as the Nome Elementary School secretary for the next two school years. I have recently chosen to stay home to raise our new baby.

I decided to run for office because I am a person of action and felt it was time to step up and actively participate in moving Nome Public Schools forward. The firing of the principal and assistant principal at NBHS, the recall election of two board members, the racial tension amongst the community during the election process last year, and the recent turmoil caused by the athletic director contract have all inspired my decision to run.

2) What would you do to improve the working relationship between the school board, the administration and the community?

To start, I would like to improve the working relationship between the school board, the administration and the community by sharing a mutual respect for each of our roles in the district and community. I would also like to avoid micromanaging or undermining the professional competence of each at doing their respective jobs.

Jennifer Reader

3) What is your vision for the Nome Public Schools system in the next 10 years?

Fulfilling our mission statement and vision while incorporating our values is my vision for the Nome Public Schools system in the next 10 years. Accomplishing each of those will sustain the positive change necessary for our district to flourish.

Mission Statement: "Nome Public Schools will educate students in a positive learning environment to be competent and productive citizens."

Vision: "Nome students will be engaged in a quality education that ensures student proficiency through a challenging curriculum that embraces diversity and is culturally responsive."

School Board Seat B

Barb Nickels Gina Thomas

Barb Nickels (incumbent)

1) Tell us about your background and why you decided to run for office again?

My name is Barb Nickels and I have been a part of the Nome community for 13 years. I truly enjoy being an active community member and have served as such in many personal and professional capacities. My volunteer service for Nome youth started as president of the Nome Preschool Association; at the same time my grandson began his official educational debut in Nome at age 4. I remained active in this position for three years. As an Association Board we successfully met our goals of building a much needed school addition, establishing policies and procedures, and ensuring all students were provided care, a safe and healthy environment and individualized social and educational learning experiences.

I next served as the president of the Parent Teacher Student Association for almost three years. Again, with active board participation we were successful in reestablishing the organization and obtaining community, teacher, parent and student support. I am no longer a PTSA board officer; however, I remain an active member, volunteer, and supporter.

Other volunteer positions I am currently involved with include being a member of the Advisory Council for the Boys and Girls Club and most recently being appointed by the Governor as a State Commissioner of the Serve Alaska Commission. This is a statewide commission focusing on specific statewide needs. One area I am involved with is the Developing Young Alaskans program with projects that include life skills development, job readiness and education for our youth.

I am also a past long-time employee of the regional consortium representing the tribes of the Bering Strait region. With this position I have been involved with assisting to provide resolution to issues and affording opportunities to the Alaska Native population at state, federal and local levels. I continue to be involved in the coordination of many cultural events in our community working with multiple agencies and organizations.

In October of 2008 I was elected to the

tenure I have been proactive in obtaining and providing information to the public as a trustee to the community that elected me. I have always been accessible, responsive and receptive to parents, staff, students and the community at large, always being transparent and encouraging open dialog between the public and Board. When Board decisions need to be made, I am confident that I have heard input from all groups, have weighed all the facts and then I ask myself, is this good for our students and district?" I have worked hard over the last three years to build public understanding, support and participation.

Why am I running for this office again? My efforts as a Board member are centered on serving all of the children in the community with each child being as important as the next. We need to continue to move forward with the NPS Strategic Plan that is a structured guide to our mission statement: Nome Public Schools will educate students in a positive learning environment to be competent and productive citizens. It is the Board's responsibility to maintain this structure supported by the community and empower the staff and leadership to implement. With my business and financial background, Board experience and knowledge of the district and community I can be that vital asset necessary to help provide leadership. I ask for your support and would be honored to have the opportunity to continue leading this endeavor.

We must first and foremost place the educational futures of our children as priority and rid the school board of special item agendas that have caused community divides and cost the district thousands of dollars and quality personnel. A critical component of being a school board member is knowing what role we play. The school board is elected to govern and is primarily responsible for setting policy, establishing goals for the district, the financial well-being of the district and the hiring and evaluating of the superintendent. The superintendent is then responsible to translate these policies and goals into actions. The board is not elected to get involved with the day to day operations and should not be micromanaging. We should only hold ourselves and our superintendent accountable to following and implementing policy and the goals of the district. This can be realized through training, work sessions, and school board retreats where all members participate and have open and honest conversations.

To be effective and improve our working relationship, we need to function as and realize we are a team. We need to increase our board's effectiveness by contributing ideas and solutions, not complaints, negativity and blame. As school board members we need to be sure we have facts and not someone's personal opinion, we need to ask questions, listen and share information, and be totally transparent in our actions. At all times we need to ensure that our board policies are enforced and our board standards are used as

I strongly believe that we have excellent and passionate teachers, staff, and administrators working with our children. We must re-establish morale among our district employees and then work to return harmony throughout the community. The school board can only gain the trust of the community if we are ambassadors for the district and in turn bring the concerns of the public to the administration. This might take some time and will be realized only through consistent transparent board actions. The board has to have a leader and members willing to focus on enhancing, enriching, and guiding these relationships.

By starting with a board willing to do all of this we can build the needed trust within our district, community and among ourselves. We need to celebrate that we are a diverse community and serve the educational needs of all the children in Nome. If we do not work together, our destiny is clear. If we work together, we will secure success for all our students for generations to come.

I challenge everyone, whether you have children in the schools or not to be more attentive to our district matters so you can draw your own informed conclusions about the issues, the School Board and its members.

3) What is your vision for the Nome Public Schools system in the next ten years?

It is my vision for Nome Public Schools that continues to fuel my passion to be a part of the school board. I dream that every student who enrolls in one of our schools feels special, has caring adults available for them in the schools, and that each and every child receives a quality education resulting in a Nome-Beltz High School diploma!

Each year we will be evaluating and reviewing our five-year Strategic Plan for continuous improvements. This plan was put together over a long period of time by a large group of concerned staff, parents, board members and administrators and has been reviewed by community organizations and is embraced and supported. The plan has five major components and once implemented fully, we will have successfully led our students to where they need to be academically and moved our District as a whole forward.

Following the goals of this plan, working with our local organizations as partners in education for stakeholder satisfaction, requiring training of staff and workforce development, providing culturally relevant curriculum for student learning, enhancing fiscal effectiveness and providing state of the art support systems, we will be successful. For the School Board itself, I envision this body spending more time focused on policies to improve student achievement.

By thinking what the future may look like for schools and our students 10 years out, we will need to be very critical in evaluating next steps. This will be a crucial time for the school board and superintendent to establish parameters of decision-making. Budgets are going to continue to get tighter, and there is the reality that our student count numbers may lower significantly due to the rising costs of living in rural Alaska and fewer economic opportunities. We need to be aware of what additional funding opportunities and partnerships are available and embrace them.

In continuing to lead our district forward, we have to foster a teaching environment that provides the necessary tools to engage our students in learning. I see an increase in the need to provide new technologies as one area where high costs will be associated. We must be proactive in our budget development processes to have the ability to combine these proven technologies with our curricula. We will need strong collaborations and mutual trust established community wide.

Nome Public Schools will continue to have the responsibility to focus on performance and to balance authority with accountability. With all of this, we need to be responsible to the tax payers to run a results oriented, efficient and productive district

Gina L. Thomas challenger

1) Tell us about your background and why you decided to run for office?

My name is Gina L. Kununaruk Thomas. My husband Michael Thomas and I have three children, Katrina, 10th grade, NBHS; Tori, 8th grade, Anvil City Science Academy; and Allan 5th grade , Nome Elementary School. I decided to run for office, because I want all our children to attend high school in Nome. I want my children, your children, and our children to state confidently that they were prepared to attend college or Vocational/trade School.

2) What would you do to improve the working relationship between the school board, the administration and the community?

I would like to improve the communication between the community, school board and administration. As a parent, I believe that the schools need to provide a more inviting atmosphere for the community.

3) What is your vision for the Nome Public Schools system in the next ten years?

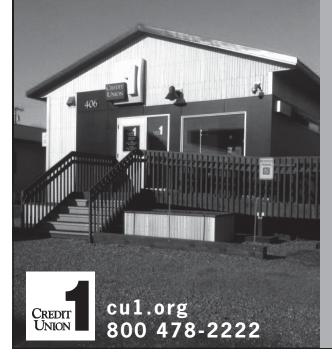

My vision for the Nome Public School system in the next ten years would be that students are academically ready to attend college or vocational/trade school.

Not only did we have a great time during our Grand Opening Celebration, together we raised $5,000 for Nome Community Food Bank.

Our newly remodeled branch is open at 406 Warren Place, so if you haven't visited our branch recently, now is the PERFECT time!

• City Council no firm decision on fluoride

in countries that have never fluoridated citizens, with a greater decline in Europe, where sodium fluoride is not put into the water supply.

Murphy cited a 2008 report contracted out by the CDC and conducted in an undisclosed area of Alaska by collection of information by one unnamed dentist using a convenience sample, questionnaires returned voluntarily by school children, that said teeth of Alaska Native village children had been damaged by diet, soda pop and lack of brushing, and concluded that more Alaska Native children should be fluoridated. The damage had been turned aside somewhat by fluoridated water in the two villages of five considered.

Proponents of fluoridation say the study shows the villages need fluoridation in more villages; opponents of fluoridation say the study says children should drink fluoridated water as an antidote to continued ingestion of sugary foods and soda pop shipped into villages via cut-rate bypass mail. Children from nonfluoridated villages had 1.2 to 2.9 times higher average decayed and filled primary teeth or decayed, missing, filled permanent teeth than children from fluoridated villages. "Lack of fluoridation and soda pop consumption were significantly associated with dental caries severity," the report

Notably, an editorial addendum said that archeological evidence showed that approximately 1 percent of the Alaska Native population had dental cavities in the mid-1920s before fluoridation and before air transport started bringing in processed food in the 1940s.

The report is just that, and not a scientific study in that fluoride studies in humans cannot be blind, where subjects participating do not know whether they are in the group medicated or in a control group, as public law requires notification of fluoridation. The subjects selected themselves by returning questionnaires. The report did not come from a clinically-controlled randomized study.

The villages are not identified; however, the study refers to a region of 52 villages whose populations are 300 to 6,000, in an area of approximately 25,000 people, 80 percent of which are Yup'ik Eskimo, pointing to the Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta. That Joseph Klejka, MD, head of the Yukon-Kuskokwim Health Corp. was one of the reporters narrows the possibilities also. Other people reporting the study were medical doctors, dentists, and people with degrees in public health. The study did not tackle the issue of correcting dental deficiencies with education and nutrition.

The Fairbanks study underlies turning off fluoride in the Fairbanks water supply and does not study Nome where there is less naturally occurring fluoride in water; likewise, the CDC-contracted study favoring fluoride addresses tooth decay and prevention in a limited area, probably the Y-K Delta, not Nome.

The Fairbanks research resulted in discontinuing fluoridation based mainly on the risks of fluorosis in the teeth of young children. Fluorosis needs to be qualified in degree, more than generally a staining of the teeth.

Dental fluorosis results from a person receiving too much fluoride during tooth development, with the critical period of exposure between one and four years of age. A mild form appears as white or chalky streaks on the teeth that are barely noticeable but may darken in time ranging to 50 percent coverage to severe fluorosis that can be black or brown stains as well as cracking or pitting of teeth, according to the American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry.

In 2006, the American Dental Association began recommending to parents that for infants from 0 to 12 months, to avoid risk of fluorosis, they could prepare the infants formula with water that was fluoride free or contained low levels of fluoride. They also could buy formula that did not need to be mixed with water.

Fluorosis is a systemic change, and little and differing research has been done on what the effect of fluoride is on other tissues, including bones. Agency studies differ on the acceptable amount of fluoride to avoid fluorosis. That amount would be difficult to control with people drinking varying amounts of water daily and obtaining varying amounts of fluoride from toothpaste, food and beverages made with fluoridated water, many experts agree.

Nome Joint Utility System, before the equipment broke down, reduced the amount of fluoride put into the water supply from 1.2 parts per million to 0.7 ppm per new information from the federal Dept. of Health and Human Services.

Nomeite Pat Booth also commented that she wanted fluoridation to continue in Nome for the sake of her grandchildren.

A City ordinance calls for fluoride in the City's water supply. To cease the addition of fluoride would require a change in the law. Handeland said he would start getting underway on restoring the sodium fluoridation practice through ANTHC, pending a different message.

Representatives of ANTHC have phoned Handeland and were present at the meeting Monday, but did not speak. A letter from the organization to the City urged the continuation of fluoridation.

The NJUS general manager said he had not pursued an offer from Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium to provide new equipment and supplies for a year until he heard what the Council decided to do on the NJUS resolution. During Council comments at the end of the meeting, Councilman Jerald Brown said, based on his opinions fluoridation should be resumed without the delay, apparently without a public comment and fact-finding period suggested by Knodel.

Brown was ready to continue with the ordinance adopted over 20 years ago.

"The existing ordinance states that water will be fluoridated. Rather than stretch it out with another study, I would like to see it enforced," he said. "My personal belief is that there are enough health benefits to continue fluoride in the water."

"If the machine goofs and too much goes in, then you're in trouble, like it happened in a village," Andersen said. In 1992, the machine in Hooper Bay malfunctioned, resulting in one death and the poisoning of more than 260 people.

The ANTHC favors fluoride in public water supplies, as does the federal government Center for Disease Control. However, in 2005 the head of CDC oral health division said fluoride in water was not the only way to get fluoride onto teeth. Opponents of fluoridating water supplies maintain that fluoride is available in toothpaste and in food and bottled drinks.

At the end of the Council meeting, Knodel said she still wanted to see numbers, because whether fluoride belonged in the water supply depended on which agency you believed, that she did not think the only way to use fluoride was in the water supply.

In other business, the Council and Mayor Denise Bahnke defused a she-said-he-said bout between Joy Baker, port boss, and Mike Benchoff, port user and owner of the tug Rustler and gold mine rig 99¢ Romance, so far avoiding the expenditure of public money to seek a solution in court. A resolution put before the Council last session asking for permission for the City administration to sue Benchoff for $7,000, give or take, and for disobeying a direct order from Baker to get his boats out of the port waters passed by Council, but implementation was delayed until this meeting pending more details. Details they got-60 pages-on Benchoff enclosed in the Council meeting document packet.

Benchoff took the podium during public comment and said he had paid his back bills at the Port of Nome at closing of the City's business day. A confab among Baker, Josie Bahnke, city manager, council members and Bahnke, mayor, decided that Benchoff would have the 99¢ Romance out of the water in a week, on Sept. 30 because he was paid up only to then, and the tug Rustler out of the port by freeze up, as he was paid through Oct. 30. Baker said she did not want to be "chasing" Benchoff again for payment after the two dates. The port commission recently adopted a measure saying no boats could be in the port waters at freeze up.

In yet other business, a vote on a measure to allow Jim West, Jr.'s continued service on the Nome Port Commission failed with only three votes to the positive, as Andersen voted no and West had to abstain.

Councilwoman Josie Stiles was excused from attending. The Council approved a request by Michels to seat Charley Lean on the commission.

In response to a request by Knodel to simplify and shorten the time for solutions to nuisance complaints on trashy lot storage, the Council unanimously approved a plan to have nuisance abatement issues come to the city manager and be heard and decided by the city manager.

Out on the docks again, Andersen questioned the Port of Nome's need to spend $175,000 with engineers Peratrovich, Nottingham and Drage engineers for a preliminary study on expansion of barge ramp facilities. Josie Bahnke said the $175,000 would move baseline research forward on ice movement and geotechnical information to see if the project were feasible. West, a member of the port commission when the issue came up, added that the money would deal with how much material would have to be excavated and whether the site was contaminated.

Andersen asked if any thought had been given to putting the study out to bid rather than giving the job to PND.

"When you don't put things out to bid for a while, it gets kind of cozy," Andersen said

West was on top of that: "They've [PND] done a lot of work for us. We might be a little cozy with them, but they are a good outfit."

Josie Bahnke thought the preliminary work would cost $300,000, but $175,000 could be squeezed out of the budget currently and a revised budget after the beginning of the year would yield the remainder.

Finally, the City land under the Mini Convention building and the environs are being surveyed to divide it up for sale, according to Bahnke, city manager. The Council voted to sell the Mini Convention Center following a discussion in executive session during the last Council meeting.

Welcom Wagon 2011

By Darla Gredigan

Welcome Wagon went off wonderfully this year. Returning teachers met 37 new BSSD teachers in Anchorage to help with all the details that you need to finish before moving to life off the road system. Teachers are housed at the UAA dorms and spend time getting their Alaska Driver's license, purchasing groceries, and necessary clothing. While they work together through new activities, they build friendships that will last for a long time.

New teachers arrive.

Some of the special sites this year included a mother moose and twins that lived near UAA, a trip on the train to Seward for some of the teachers, and a visit to Earthquake Park to see what a 9.2 earthquake can do to the earth.

Done with his shopping and having a free day, Doug Coulter had a great 20-plus mile hike in his rubber boots in the rain and sun down Turnagain Arm at McHugh Creek, with no water, no snacks or camera. He did have his pistol and survived the adventure and even saw a nice black bear.

Colleen Deighton from Shishmaref tells us that one of the benefits of Welcome Wagon is that teachers have a better idea of the layout of Anchorage for when they chaperone students.

Whether it is helping teachers feel better prepared, assisting with some end of summer fun, or just making new friends, Welcome Wagon helps our staff to be better teachers for the beginning of the year.

A Science Experience

By Judy Standafer

It was a great weather day in Wales and the villagers were clamming. So when science class rolled around Ms Standafer decided to have her students explore the beach and clam. Starfish were coming in by the hoards. Not only were there starfish, clams and mussels, but hermit crabs, Alaska king crabs, and several native delights like sea worms.

Elder Lena Sereadlook shows how to bite off both ends and push the worm out into her mouth.

We also found other types of worms that you clean out the insides and eat. One student decided to dissect his worm. Another student later cleaned and ate it. The students collected several containers of delights. They were washed and taken home.

As Stacey Meuller strolled along the beach she exclaimed, "I have never seen anything like it! What a blessing to see such an unusual act of nature, and to do so with our students. The students and teachers enthusiasm was a joy to see as we were all inspired to learn in such a powerful, hands on, way."

St. Michael Students Never Quit

By Tim Burns

Students of all ages enjoy the practical application that shop classes have to offer. In Mr. Thompson's shop class at Anthony A. Andrews School, the students are embarking on another large construction project. In an unfortunate incident at the end of last school year, the recently constructed addition to the shop was burned down, with a substantial amount of training stations and tools included. Staff and students' emotions ran high as the hopes and dreams of this endeavor seemed to go up in smoke.

Students work on constructing the Metals and Power Mechanics Shop.

As school began this year, the pride and commitment of the St. Michael community began to shine through. With the leadership of Mr. Thompson and the willingness to rebuild of the students, they decided not to give up on their goals. Construction has begun and the students are applying skills and concepts learned the previous year to rebuild the Metals and Power Mechanics Shop. These projects are only made possible through the support of the Bering Strait School District, NSEDC, IRA, and strong community support.

Gambell Mural

By Kathie Klunder Summer School Teacher Gambell, AK

During Gambell's summer school we had Ms. Linda Lyons, an Alaskan artist, came in to assist students in designing and painting a mural. They chose the theme of "Our Community". Students were taught basic skills in planning, drawing and painting a mural.

In the planning stage, students came up with various ideas for the theme. They then discussed the varied objects they wanted to represent in the mural. The students wanted to depict both the school and their community within the mural.

The students then began to sketch out their ideas. Some ideas were taken from photos as well. When it was decided what would go into the mural Ms. Lyons then assisted the students in laying out a rough draft. After the student input the rough draft was changed somewhat then was accepted. Then the process of actually placing the mural onto the wall began. MS. Lyons stayed up through the night to get the rough sketch onto the wall for students to begin painting on the following day.

Painting the mural began on the fourth day. As the students moved along, they would examine the mural each afternoon and decide whether they like the progression. At one point they decided there was a part they did not like. That section was painted over and the students decided how they wanted it changed. After two weeks the mural was completed. I cannot express enough how proud of the students I am. They all worked hard and had a great time in the process.

New Students at UAF

By Perry Corsetti

The University of Alaska, Fairbanks has 5 new students from the Bering Strait School District this fall! They are: Cecilia Mike (Stebbins), Deyonne Milligrock (Stebbins), Danielle Waghiyi (Stebbins), Jarad Billingsley (St. Michael), and Elmer Campbell (Gambell). These students participated in the UAF Campus Tour sponsored by BSSD last April. The campus tour gave students an introduction to college life, the UAF campus, and the overall registration process. All five students have now begun their courses of study at UAF! Congratulations and best of luck to you in your future studies!

Here are a few pictures taken by Barb Ross (former BSSD teacher in Stebbins) of the girls on campus.

Karate

By Clint Schultz White Mountain

On Saturday May 21st, 2011 the community Karate program held its first annual American Bushido-Kai Karate Tournament. This was a great event that brought together over 30 participants, and allowed for our local community of White Mountain to see the progress of our students, and to support our Karate program. This tournament was put on by the White Mountain Chief Instructor Clint Shultz, with the overwhelming support of the President of the ABKA Denny Holzbauer and his assistant instructor Christa Bailey.

Each student performed their belt level form or Kata, and competed in sparring. We had wonderful competition from all age levels, with four students taking home the "Most Outstanding Karateka Award" which was a hand made trophy presented by Sensei Holzbauer. Every student who participated in the tournament received a medal and a gift from Denny and Christa. We our thankful for the support of White Mountain, the ABKA, and the hard work of each and every student.

School Time, School Time, the Wonderful Golden Rule Time!

By Rob Picou Superintendent

Once again we gather to celebrate the start of school. Our students have been waiting for us all summer, staying up late into the midnight sun, fishing, hunting and gathering berries. They have hopefully spent quality time with their families and have learned many of life's greatest lessons from their elders. One thing we know is that all throughout Bush Alaska students are excited about the return of their teachers and the start of school. Their greatest hope for the new school year is a fun, energetic teacher and a friendly principal.

Although our teachers and principals are among the very best educators in Alaska, a teacher and a principal are only part of what is needed for a quality education. Parents, you are your child's most important teacher. It is time to turn off the television, reestablish school night expectations, and get involved in your child's education. Please, go to the school and ask the teachers and principal.

"What can I do to help my child? What can I do to help my neighbor's child?" As we go forth into this new school year, let's remember that there is no limit to what can be accomplished when good people surround a common vision and do what is in the best interest of children.

No other animal has the defense method of musk oxen. When danger threatens, they do not run away. Instead, a herd of twenty to forty musk oxen backs into a rough circle facing outward with the calves in the center. This ring of horned heads can defy such natural enemies as the arctic wolf and the grizzly bear. Why is it that musk oxen know how to protect their young from danger, but human beings have such a hard time? We need to become like the musk oxen and form a circle of protection around every single child.

Traveling around this great region, I am reminded at every turn that we are truly blessed to work and live in such a rich land of grandeur and natural beauty. The sparkling waters of the Norton Sound and the Bering Sea from which we gather so much of our food, the bountiful land from which we gather succulent berries and nutritious moose meat and caribou are beautiful, but the greatest beauty of all are the smiles of the young people who walk every day through the doors of our schools.

As we start this new school year, let us stand strong in the belief that when we teach we teach forever in the heart and the imagination of a child. Let us remind ourselves that we are all teachers, classified and certified, parents and elders, that children are watching us and they are learning as much from our actions and our attitudes as from our words. Let us invest the time and energy that it takes to become true partners in the higher purpose of educating each and every child in all fifteen communities of the Bering Strait School District.

On behalf of the Board of Education, thank you for your commitment to our children. A school should be a place of joy and celebration!

Joint boards tackle regional challenges

music and vocational classes.

He said that children are natural 'learners' and when kids drop out of school, is it not because they don't want to learn but because what they learn does not relate to their world. In that vein, Picou presented a concept of several high school graduation paths that would prepare kids for either continued education in college, becoming members of the community work force or choosing a career or technical job.

Picou said that the goal of the federal No-child-left-behind Act was to get kids into college, not to prepare them for other careers. He proposes something different based on the fact that out of the 10 percent of students who chose to go to college, only 6 percent are successful.

Picou offered up a solution, the socalled 10 plus 2 program in which a student would complete the core requirements of tenth grade. By choice, the student then can pick a college pathway, a career and technical path or a community work force pathway. This would give students a valid choice of how they want to prepare for their future.

Picou ended his presentation, saying that if MacDonald's lost as many clients as the BSSD loses students. they would quit selling hamburgers. "If we are going to save everyone of these kids, we need your help," Picou said. "The schools cannot do it alone."

Comments from the joint boards mostly echoed Picou's assessment of the situation. Too many kids drop out. "We need more involvement from parents and community members to support our students," said Ellen Richards of Wales.

Teacher turnover in some villages is too frequent, resulting in poor student performances. Inadequate teacher housing keeps good teachers out of the villages. Kawerak board member Robert Keith remarked that the BIA, church influences and educators were at the forefront of taking culture and traditional, relevant education from the Native population. "We need to reinvest and bring some of that back," Keith said. "We need more of our own people in the educational system." Picou agreed by saying that for too long education has been done to Native Alaskans. "It is time to do education with Native Alaskans," Picou said.

Alcohol destroys lives

Alcohol, may it be imported or home-brewed, is at the root of many tragedies that rock the communities in the Norton Sound and Bering Strait area.

Alaska State Trooper Sergeant Andrew Merrill of the Nome post pleaded for help from the communities in the effort to catch bootleggers and homebrew operations.

Although community members do call in tips, or even write out names of known bootleggers, actually catching the bad guys isn't an easy thing. "It's a cat-and-mouse game," Merrill said. He reported that it's sometimes not only the obvious bad guys who import, but some bootleggers don't hesitate to use their teenage nieces or relatives to take "a package" back to their village.

"It's not your usual suspects, Merrill says. "Alcohol gets there with PAs, nurses, construction workers, even some health aides," Merrill said. A recent incident, he said, almost sent him over the edge. A few weeks ago, an escort, with ticket paid for by the Alaska State Troopers, escorted a suicidal individual to Nome. On the way back, the escort was caught with ten bottles of alcohol in the bag. "Usually we don't arrest people at the airport for importation," Merrill said. "But if I catch an escort, or a health aide, I'll take them immediately to jail."

Merrill asked the communities to provide detailed information when they know about alcohol importation. He also asked the community leaders to help VPSOs or troopers by appreciating the work they do and to once in a while thank them for doing this important yet difficult public safety service.

Merrill encouraged communication from both sides and said he does encourage his troopers to participate in as many community meetings or events as possible so that the communities "know their trooper."

Federal funding down to trickles

Federal funding streams are drying up, report several entities.

Joel Neimeyer, federal co-chair of the Denali Commission, said that funding has been dramatically re-

Steve Weaver with the Alaska Native Health Consortium's water and sewer division said that his funding stream has been cut in half, "We have $980 million worth of unmet needs and $50 million in the budget to resolve that," Weaver reported.

The state is not helping much either. "The disparity between available funding and the cost of addressing rural Alaska's sanitation needs is approximately $689 million, a 103 percent increase over the state fiscal year 2007 budget. If current funding and cost trends do not change, this gap will continue to widen," Weaver said in his report.

The two biggest concerns he faces are climate change and the rising cost of energy. However, he also offered solutions. He said that traditional funding sources, aka federal earmarks, are a thing of the past and that ANTHC collaborates with other entities to come up with creative solutions. Take Selawik for example. One third of power generated by the Selawik diesel generator —or $350,000 —went to heat their water storage tank.

Instead of getting in line for the federal funding list, Selawik joined ANTHC's energy collaborative and managed to lower their annual water plant operating costs by $200,000 just by plugging a hole in the heat

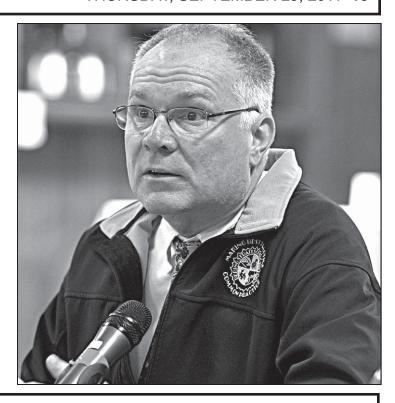

The same could work for Stebbins, Weaver said. ANTHC put together a master plan for a water treatment plant and water storage tank and recommended a piped system. The State of Alaska did not approve the piped system, saying that residents can't afford the $190 per month utility bill if the system were

Weaver said that the piped system is off the table for now, but that ANTHC would work with AVEC to come up with a solution to bring energy costs down.

Solutions could be to co-locae water and power plants and to experiment with wind turbines and to use the excess energy they produce

Smoking cessation may be contagious

FAMILY

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Last week, the city of Nome joined a growing list of communities that have become smoke-free in public buildings. This single decision may result in a profound increase in the number of people who quit s m o k i n g throughout the region.

Here is why. According to research published in the New England Journal of Medicine,

England Journal of Medicine,
smoking cessation tends to be contagious, especially among family members, friends, and co-workers.
Researchers who followed the smoking behaviors of over 12,000 people from 1971 to 2003 found that people posed to quitting as individuals.

This is perhaps surprising because smoking cessation has been largely thought of as an individual choice. Efforts to help people quit are often personalized with cessation counsel-tend to quit smoking in groups as oping, nicotine replacement and medication targeted at individual patients who have decided to quit.

The research reported in NEJM finds that targeting social networks like families, groups of friends, or groups of co-workers may be more effective at fostering long-term cessation. The desire to remain in the norm of a social group provides a powerful motivation to quit, because when one person stops smoking, others in the same social network are influenced to stop smoking, and individuals who continue to smoke are increasingly marginalized, according to the study.

There is a good chance that this ripple effect also applies to entire towns and villages. When one organization or community decides to go smoke-free, people within those communities will tend to quit together.

Smoking is the number one cause of preventable illness in the United States.

Despite the nationwide reduction in the number of smokers, down to 21 percent in the lower-48, smoking in the Norton Sound region remains chronically elevated at roughly 60 percent. This is concerning because smoking takes such a heavy toll on the health of people in this region.

The GOCADAN study (Genetics of Coronary Artery Disease in Alaska Natives) demonstrated that smokers in the Norton Sound region are twice as likely to have signs of atherosclerosis, or hardening of the arteries, as non-smokers. Nationwide, smoking has been implicated as a cause of heart disease, chronic lung disease, osteoporosis, brain vessel disease, and many cancers including lung, stomach, pancreatic, and bladder cancer.

Medical professionals know that successful smoking cessation always starts with a personal decision. No pill, patch, or therapy is as effective as a person simply making a decision to quit. According to research, this personal decision has a powerful effect on others as well.

I would appreciate your vote on October 4th.

• NJU fluoride resolution

Moody said he was against fluoridation because of data on fluorosis, an effect on young children's teeth varying from chalky white marks in mildest cases to brown or black stains. An ideal quantity of fluoride is difficult to detect as the amount of fluoride ingested from food, beverages and toothpaste combined with fluoride in water could amount to an overdose, he said.

"If you give too much to a small person, it not only turns their teeth brown, but curls them and bends them," he said.

In his letter, Kelso said NSHC dentists and dental health aides monitor the fluorosis condition in patients and have not noted any with severe discoloration; certain medications and genetic conditions could discolor teeth noticeably, not to be confused with fluorosis.

Emmons has been very vocal during the fluoride debate. Reading a City of Fairbanks fluoridation task force study that provided major foundation for Fairbanks stopping the fluoridation of the water supply has impressed him, he said.

"It's a pretty good study with lots of documentation with doctors and dentists represented. It discusses that because of babies, adding this to the water isn't right," Emmons said.

The Fairbanks documents consider the addition of fluoride to that local water supply, which has more naturally occurring fluoride already than is present in Nome's water from Moonlight Springs.

Emmons has maintained an objection to residents being treated with fluoride with no choice.

"You're giving the same dose to a 150-pound person and to a six pound baby," he said. "Most of Europe doesn't put anything in the their water. They don't mass medicate people —that's in the U.S."

Board member Patrick Johanson said he was "on the fence" on the issue, that the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium favored fluoridated water and had offered to provide NJUS equipment, fluoride and training for a year.

When the vote came on directing John Handeland, utility manager to send a resolution from the NJUS board to the Council ending the requirement for fluoridated water, Johanson ended up casting the only "no" vote. "Yes" votes came from Willson, Emmons, Moody and board member Dave Barron.

The Nome Common Council discussed the resolution from NJUS Sept. 26, but delayed action pending more information and selecting a way to inform the public for their input on the fluoridated water issue.

sometimes to heat the large water storage tanks.

"The goal is to reposition the community and to press the state again for approval of the piped system," Weaver said. He explained that a respiratory illness study on infants, done in the Y-K Delta, concluded that babies from "honeybucket" households are 11 times more likely to be hospitalized with respiratory infections than babies living in a home connected to sewer and water.

'The impact of water and sewer on the health of the people is far greater than we thought," Weaver

Other issues

The Alaska Congressional Delegation also submitted reports; either through staff or like Senator Mark Begich live via teleconferencing. Senator Donnie Olson's legislative aide presented a report, and State Representative Neal Foster gave his report via teleconference. Foster identified a few state issues, including working on a permanent solution for the transportation to and from Little Diomede.

The boards received an update on the Native American/Native Alaskan preference in hiring employees to work at the new hospital.

Ryan Schubert with contractor Inuit Services said that since the project is a federal project by the Indian Health Service, there was no local hire stipulation, but rather a Native American or Native Alaskan hire preference. The Native work force from management down to laborer positions was at about 24 percent or 77 positions. With different sub-contractors coming and going to work on their respective jobs, the number is fluctuating.

Schubert said Inuit worked closely with the Nome Eskimo Community to hire workers. Merlin Koonooka from Gambell commented that he found it discouraging that not more local people were hired on to help build this multi-million dollar proj-

Brian James remarked that the lack of housing in Nome was one of the major obstacles for people from the region to come and work in

stiff spines on their back that support their long dorsal fin. The pighead is distinguished from other types of pricklebacks because of its stout head, thick lips, and proportionally smaller eyes. Pighead pricklebacks can be found from the Sea of Japan to western Canada, including Norton Sound. These fish are found mostly in shallow ocean waters, although adults can tolerate diluted seawater such as the brackish waters

Lady Nanooks volleyball team prepares for ACS Tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

Last Friday night, the Nome-Beltz High School lady's volleyball team decided to hold a fun event by taking on the alumni in one match and the Nome-Beltz High School's boys basketball team in another match. In both matches, the Lady Nanooks did what they have been doing to all of their competition thus far, dominating them. However, more than anything, the exhibition matches were a way for the Nanooks to get more practice and preparation in for when their tournament season begins this Thursday.

The Lady Nanooks, who have started their season at a scorching 7-0 record, will be heading to Anchorage to be a part of the Anchorage Christian School Invitational. With the combination of multiple strong teams and a full weekend of action, this will be the toughest test yet for the Nanooks. The first real test for the Nanooks will come Thursday night when they play Dillingham, another unbeaten team thus far. The winner would take sole possession of first place in the region.

"We have to go into the game knowing that they will be a tough team and knowing that we can be the best," said Rob Luce, the head coach of the Lady Nanooks. "We need to mentally get over the hump of Dillingham because they seem to always have our number, but I think we have a big, fast, and disciplined team this year that we can get over them this year," said Luce.

Dillingham will not be the only test for the Nanooks over the weekend. The invitational, which is scheduled to take place from this Thursday through Saturday, is also going to have teams from Bethel and Anchorage Christian School. This three day stretch makes it difficult for the Nanooks with the amount of games they will need to play. Also, having the mentality to give full effort in every contest will be a challenge. Even with all of these factors and concerns, Coach Luce feels very confident in his team thus far.

"I am still predicting that we will be a tough team to beat in regions, but it is up to the girls how far they want to go as a team," said Luce.

The Lady Nanooks have looked dominant thus far this season, and with tournament play about to begin and the real test of the season upcoming, will the Lady Nanooks achieve or regress? As Coach Luce said, the ball may very well be in their court to decide their own fate.

Two Nome men who are part of a larger ring dealing prescription drugs, pleaded guilty in Nome's Superior Court. Six men were indicted in April for distributing oxycodone, a prescription drug painkiller, and for conspiring to do so.

Last week, two of them entered a guilty plea. Zachary Andrew Nashalook pleaded guilty to one consolidated count of conspiring to distribute oxycodone. He was handed a sentence of six and a half years in jail, with three and a half years suspended and four years probation.

Rayne Aukongak, 24, pleaded guilty to misconduct of a controlled substance and was sentenced to four years, with two years suspended and three years probation. Also indicted for charges of misconduct involving a controlled substance and conspiracy are Junior J. Jones, 63, Alex William Vaughn, 42, Zonna Kunnuk, Alaska State Trooper James Sears said that Nashalook and Aukongak were both dealing with oxycodone out of their house. Sears said he had been working on the case for one and a half years. "Prescription drug abuse here in Nome is out of control," said Sears.

With alcohol being the number one drug of choice, followed by marijuana, prescription drug use is a

A thick, black column of smoke rose into the darkening night sky behind an abandoned warehouse building next to the Mini Convention Center on Monday night shortly after 9 p.m. The source of the smoke was a deserted truck set on fire, filling the area with the smell of burnt rubber.

The Nome Fire Department responded with more than 20 firefighters and two fire engines to fight the flames. The truck was completely engulfed in flames when the fire fighters arrived and tried to put out the flames and keep the fire from spreading to the container van next to the burning vehicle and the adjacent old warehouse building. The Nome Volunteer Ambulance Service also responded.

A crowd of teenagers and other spectators gathered on the seawall to watch the spectacle, snapping photos on cell phones until police cleared the area after a small explosion went off. Fire fighters said a propane tank exploded. The sight of two fuel tanks close by sent the spectators scurrying away.

Shortly thereafter the fire was under control but the excitement wasn't over yet.

Dispatch sent police and the fire department to the Sitnasuak parking lot with the news that there was a second truck burning.

At first police and fire fighters went to the parking lot behind the

Council, School Board see new faces

The Nome School Board has a new member as Jennifer Reader garnered 64.11 percent of votes over incumbent Marie Tozier's 35.89 percent. Seat B remained with incumbent Barb Nickels, who edged out challenger Gina Thomas. Nickels had 404 votes, Thomas had 348 votes

The Nome Common Council will see one new member among their ranks. Louis Green, Sr. won with 58.7 percent of the vote over appointed incumbent Jim West, Jr. West got 39.84 percent of ballots

Incumbent for Seat B, Mary Knodel, won by 70.24 percent over challenger Nikolai Ivanoff, who received 28.55 percent of the votes.

Despite Janice Doherty's last minute effort to wage a write-in campaign, Denise Michels will be Mayor of Nome for two more years. Michels received 420 votes over 299 write-ins.

No surprises at the Utility Board election results — Pat Johanson and Carl Emmons ran unopposed for seat A and E. They garnered 96.72 percent and 95.29 percent of the votes, respectively.

In both Nome precincts, 721 voters out of 2,312 registered voters made it to the polls. There were 14 questioned votes that have to be verified with the State Division of Elections, but they are not expected to make a difference as no race results were that close. The 50 percent plus one wins the seat.

The election results will be canvassed in a special meeting of the Nome Common Council on Thursday at noon.

DNR nets more than $9 million in offshore lease sale

Big players drive up lease bids

State Department of Natural Resources officials report that the auction that sold off state-owned offshore mineral leases last week brought a total of $9,267,299 into the state's coffers. The numbers are not final until the bidders follow through and pay the entire amount of their bids, which are due 30 days after the auction. The state agency held the offshore lease sale on September 28 at Old St. Joe's Hall in Nome. Eighty-six lease tracts were offered for bid, ranging from 40 acres to 2,800 acres in size. The total acreage on the auction block was 23,793 acres.

Miners streamed into Old St. Joe's Hall, filling the venue with the distinct smell of hardworking men, well-used Carhartts, machine oil and smoke. Auctioneer Ron Alleva said prior to starting the bidding that he smelled something else. "I smell money here in this room," Alleva said. The atmosphere was a mixture of tension and anticipation, with a hint of gambling and plenty of fierce competition.

This was a rare lease sale of its kind. Offshore gold leases aren't done anywhere else in Alaska and the last time the DNR held an offshore gold lease sale like this was in 1999. As one old-timer in the audience remarked, gold was traded around $200 per ounce at the time.

Things have changed dramatically as gold prices are hovering around the $1,700 mark. The gold market inspired new partnerships among smaller gold mining entrepreneurs and new companies to register within the State of Alaska in order to qualify for placing bids. The spectrum of gold miners was present at Old St. Joe's with small dredge operators who bid on near-shore parcels that went for as little as $10,000, to multi-national companies that placed bids for millions of dollars.

Bidding began an hour late, as the plane carrying the DNR officials was delayed. Mineral property managers with the DNR Kerwin Krause and Bill Cole conducted the auction, kept up with paperwork and left the auctioneering up to professional Ron Al-

Institute of the North hosts Norway Policy Tour

Hallo (hello in Norwegian) from my wife, Willow and I. Along with several Alaskan lawmakers, we attended the Norway Policy Tour hosted by the Institute of the North last month. The main mission of this trip was to compare Norway and Alaska and to build on our partnership in the development of oil and gas resources. Although we are half a world away from this northern European country, Alaska parallels Norway in regard to resources, and Norway can be a model for responsible and sustainable development.

As a group, we spent five long, intense days of meetings, presentations and visits with a multitude of Norwegian agencies, industries, and government leaders, which thoroughly illustrated several themes regarding resource development and state

I'd also like to share a few points Norway uses which I think are essential in terms of oil & gas development:

• Oil countries should produce and consume fossil fuels in more environmentally friendly ways. (One barrel of oil developed in Norway has half as much pollution as the world

• Too little emphasis has been placed on energy conservation and efficiency. (More emphasis should include energy development as corresponding to community development). • Increase renewable energy development – here in Alaska, there are several renewable energy viabilities that could be further explored.

I was also very fascinated with how the Norwegian government allows all parties to have a seat at the table in the country's resource development plans. It allows for public and private sectors to come together with regulators, owners, and services to voice their concerns including safety and taxation. There is no "leakage" between these sectors. The country recognizes that energy and environmental issues are at conflict with oil and gas development; and the lawmakers work to find a balance. In Norway, it is the national government that is in the driver's seat. This is quite different from Alaska's competing local and state government agendas.

Norway's government reserves 100 percent of it resource development revenue for its Government Pension Fund, which is very much like the Alaska Permanent Fund. They withdraw only 4 percent of its value to support the government. The general feeling in Norway is that this is the right long-term fiscal

Coastal Affairs and Communities

I was also very impressed with how Norway has balanced development and care for the environment for decades. They have coexisted without any significant incidents. Zero tolerance for oil spills and strict safety standards are mandatory and enable this responsible sustainable development.

What I really liked about Norway's policy regarding development was the welcoming of participation from the local level. The local communities have a well-established process

The Shallow End of the Think Tank

We are supposed to sit up and take note of what is said by a leading Washington think tank. Why are we so impressed by a bunch of heavy-duty Pooh-Bahs sitting on their derrières and thinking? Holy mackerel! They are thinking grand thoughts and someone actually pays them to do this. Do these tankers ever get off their knowledgeable behinds and work?

Does it take a genius to look at the Republican Party and wonder who drained their think tank? They cling to the philosophy that all problems will be solved if big government got off people's backs so they could step all over the little guys. Where do they dig up such a bunch of wing nuts for their Presidential candidates? Voodoo science, whacko religious preaching, global warming is a myth, vaccination causes mental illness, revisionist history books, — perhaps the think tanks are banking on voter ignorance and apathy. Wouldn't it be something if the Washington think tank folks could get the Republicans and the Democrats to work together and invest in the public infrastructure to build roads, railroads, airports, hospitals, power plants and schools and get Americans back to work.

The awful truth is that the Tea Party Republicans will oppose all public investment. They have only a one-track mind and that is "tax cuts" (for the wealthy). We need bipartisan support of investment in public infrastructure. Unfortunately, even though the public supports the necessity of government investment in infrastructure, as long as President Barack Obama is for it, the Tea Party Republicans are against it. The Republican majority in Congress needs to pump some juice back into their think tank and look past the spout of their silly little teapot. The public is increasingly fed up with their self-serving obstructionism. - N.L.M.-

Former Eskimo Whaling Commission director indicted for stealing federal funds

Maggie Ahmaogak, 61, of Barrow was indicted by a federal grand jury in Anchorage last week for embezzling federal funds from the Eskimo Whaling Commission.

Ahmaogak was the executive director from 1990 until her termination in 2007. The indictment alleges that Ahmaogak stole and misapplied about $475,000 of AEWC funds for her personal use. The US Alaska district attorney alleges that Ahmaogak used the money to gamble in Washington state, New Orleans and Las Vegas, that she bought three new snow machines for personal use and to make a down payment for a Hummer. If convicted, Ahmaogak faces a maximum of 20 years in prison and a fine of up to $250,000.

Alaska touts its potential for rare earth minerals

During a minerals summit held in Fairbanks last week, Governor Sean Parnell and Senator Lisa Murkowski touted Alaska's potential to produce rare earth elements. These minerals are used in electronic equipment. Parnell stoked fears that China is controlling the market and that Alaska could provide for the production of the rare earth elements. The state funded a three-year, $500,000 land-assessment project to find out where and in what quantities these resources exist in Alaska. The one-day conference featured a lineup including Murkowski, the ranking member of the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy & Natural Resources, a team of world-class geologists, industry executives and Alaska Natural Resources Commissioner Dan Sullivan.

Coast Guard busts illegal fishing vessel

The U.S. Coast Guard has seized a stateless fishing vessel and crew suspected of large-scale illegal highseas drift net fishing in the North Pacific Ocean. A tip from the fisheries agency in Japan prompted the Coast Guard to launch a helicopter from the USCG cutter Munro. They located the fishing vessel Bangun Perkasa with 22 fishermen aboard. about 2,600 miles southwest of Kodiak. The Bangun Perkasa's crew reportedly abandoned their fishing nets and attempted to leave the area once they spotted the helicopter flying above them. The vessel was determined to be operating without valid flag state registration, and was seized as a stateless vessel for violations of U.S. law. A Munro boarding team determined the vessel had more than 10 miles of drift net, 30 tons of squid and approximately 30 shark carcasses aboard. They retrieved the abandoned net and escorted the boat to Dutch Harbor. During the transit, the Coast Guard boarding crew also discovered rats aboard. NOAA's Office of Law Enforcement took the case from the Coast Guard for further investigation.

Plane crash kills pilot

On Sept. 23, a plane crash on Kodiak Island killed pilot James Andie, 49, of Kodiak. He flew a 1959 Dehavilland DHC-3 Turbine Otter operated by Paklook Air inbound to Kodiak from the village of Old Harbor. Two passengers survived the crash with various injuries. The pilot was pronounced deceased on scene. The passengers were transported to Kodiak by a USCG helicopter and then to Providence Kodiak Island Medical Center by the Kodiak Fire Department for treatment. The NTSB is investigating the crash.

Trident Seafoods Corp. settles fines with EPA for $2.5 million

Trident Seafoods Corp., one of the world's largest seafood processors, has agreed to pay a $2.5 million civil penalty and invest millions in seafood processing waste controls to settle alleged violations of the Clean Water Act. Unauthorized discharges of seafood processing waste lead to large seafood waste piles on the seafloor, creating anoxic, or oxygendepleted, conditions that result in unsuitable habitats for fish and other living organisms, said the EPA in a press release.

The agreement requires Trident to invest $30 to 40 million in source control and waste pile remediation measures. The source control measures include building a fishmeal plant in Naknek that will have the capacity to handle at least 30 million pounds of seafood processing waste annually. Trident has also agreed to reduce the amount of seafood processing waste discharged from the Akutan, Cordova, St. Paul and Ketchikan facilities and monitor the amount of seafood processing waste discharged into Starrigavan Bay in Sitka. One seafood processing waste pile in Akutan Harbor is currently estimated to be more than 50 acres in size.

The EPA complaint alleged that Trident had more than 480 clean water act violations at 14 of its onshore and off-shore Alaskan seafood processing facilities. The violations include discharging without a necessary permit, exceeding discharge limits, failing to comply with permit restrictions on discharge locations, including discharges into at least two National Wildlife Refuges, creating oxygen-depleting "zones of deposit" or underwater piles of fish processing waste occupying more than the allowed one acre of seafloor.

Alaska's bypass mail under

Two Congressmen of California and Florida are pushing legislation that would require Alaska to pay the USPS for the costs of bypass mail in Alaska. As the postal debate continues about how the USPS can stay afloat, congressmen Issa of California and Ross of Florida introduced a substitute amendment to their Postal Reform bill that would require the State of Alaska to pay the U.S. Postal Service for the costs of bypass mail. Alaska Senator Lisa Murkowski said she would fight the amendment, as bypass mail is crucial to bush Alaska.

leva. "By definition, an auctioneer can pick your pockets with his tongue," Alleva warned the bidders jokingly before he let the bidding begin. Also present was Leslie Tose, small mines coordinator with the Army Corps of Engineers, who is in charge of permitting the operations in deeper water.

The auction started with selling off the smaller near shore lease tracts, and local miner Judy Martinson set the tone with the winning bid on a 133-acre tract for $58,000. The auctioneer started with a requested starting bid amount, increasing the bids in $500 or $1,000 increments. Bidders waved their number signs when they wanted to top their opponent's bid. The top three winning bids were recorded. Bidders only had to pay the minimum bid deposit at 88¢ per acre, with the rest of the final bid amount due in 30 days.

Rules provided that if the winner doesn't come through with the money, the option goes to the second highest bidder and if the second bid amount isn't produced, it will go to the third highest bidder. The auctioneer asked only the third highest bidder for their best offer and allowed for a different amount than the third highest bidder actually bid during the outcry auction. The leases are good for 10 years and are valid as long as production continues.

Leases bigger than 160 acres were sold through sealed bidding. The sealed bids weren't opened until 4 p.m. and by that time, most of the bidders had drained out of Old St. Joe's Hall. While there were less people, the atmosphere was still intense. AngloGold Ashanti submitted bids on almost every tract. In some instances, AngloGold was outbid by locals. Tract 58, a 320-acre parcel, went to Doug Martinson who offered $37,700 for it with AngloGold Ashanti offering $24,000. The third bidder was Frank McFarland offering $21,282.

The bigger parcels, however, were snatched up by bids far above the closest competitor. AngloGold bid $180,450 on Tract 60, with second bidder being Doug Martinson at $37,700. When the envelopes on tract 74 were opened, the quiet of the room was interrupted by hushed whispers of surprise when Kerwin Krause read AngloGold Ashanti's bid of $1,617,820. The closest bidder to that tract was Solomon Gold with an offer of a little bit over AngloGold Ashanti is a global mining company with headquarters in Johannesburg, South Africa. According to Kerwin Krause, the company created a joint venture with African diamond miner De Beers called AuruMar Ltd. AuruMar is a technical services company for marine exploration. AuruMar is based in Cape Town, South Africa.

Besides AngloGold Ashanti, there were other companies that bid on the larger tracts. Shoreline Resources is a newly formed company out of Portland, Oregon, comprised of individual investors. While they didn't win any tracts, they offered very competitive bids. Solomon Gold also bid on many offshore tracts. DNR's Kerwin Krause said that Solomon Gold is a company that was registered in Alaska on September 23, but is affiliated with Alaska Earth Sciences, an Anchorage based company with several subsidiaries, including Alaska Earth Resources.

When all was said and done that night, Kerwin Krause said that he didn't expect bidding to fetch such high prices. He said that in 1999, about 35 bidders brought in $225,000.

Krause said that he would like to open a DNR field office in Nome next summer and task the DNR representative in Nome with enforcing the permits and dealing with people who may be trespassing on somebody else's lease.

Krause said that this week, DNR plans to publish a list with final bid numbers and the top three bidders for each tract.

Sitnasuak building on First Avenue and checked a red truck parked there. Nothing. Then they moved on to the larger parking lot facing Front Street, across from the BOT, and found signs that somebody tried to set a red truck on fire. "We believe the fire was intentionally set," said NVFD's Assistant Chief Jerry Steiger.

Steiger said there was an incendiary device in the tank. "We were close to having the other place under control and could use our resources, so we sent half of our folks to the second location," said Steiger. The second car was not yet on fire, but firefighters hosed it down just in case. The police took over from there and the firefighters went back to the burnt-out truck behind the warehouse building on River Street to make sure that no smoldering occurred and that the fire was completely extinguished.

Steiger said that the outcome of the fire could've been worse. ' were lucky that we found the vehicle as early as we did," he said. "Fifteen minutes later it could've been quite dramatic with the building close by." There are major communication lines, phone lines and electrical lines running overhead in the vicinity. "A large fire there could've caused a huge amount of problems,"

Nome police said that both incidents are suspicious and are under investigation. Steiger added that there was a fair amount of damage. The burned truck is completely destroyed and the fire burnt into the container van parked next to it. The building also sustained some damage. The truck had been parked there for a while and was used by homeless people as a shelter.

Nobody was hurt in the incident.

Police also responded to a report of a electrical breaker box being thrown at the Aurora Hotel.

NJUS reaching to the sky for energy savings

By Sandra L. Medearis

The girl in the fairy tale Rumpelstiltskin could spin straw into gold, remember? NJUS has designs to spin wind into kilowatts. Those could turn into gold for electric power ratepayers—not a lot now, but some, maybe more in the future.

Next summer a new 900-kilowatt wind turbine may appear on Banner Ridge where red lights now warn aircraft of 18 turbines already spinning out power at the Banner Wind Farm. The new "windmill" could not be missed, with a rotor 180 feet across and a height of 246 feet.

How would it decrease use of diesel? The Nome Joint Utility System board members have been pouring over a conceptual design study reporting that operating a EWT-900 kilowatt turbine would save 560,000 gallons of diesel fuel a year, meaning a 15 percent reduction in total consumption by NJUS generators. Figuring fuel saved at $3.75 per gallon, the project pencils out an annual saving of $2.1 million annually.

So what? Bringing it home with the bacon, that would mean a potential savings on utility bills.

"The potential effect would be a reduction of $20-$25 off a utility bill for 500 kilowatts, based on $4 fuel," NJUS manager, John K. Handeland said. "If the world changes and there are not continuing increases in diesel costs, the savings in the short run would not be that great.

"But looking over the next 20 years and where fuel prices have a potential to go upward, that's where we would be glad we made this investment for the future. Along with that, we get to decrease our dependence and consumption of fossil fuel." Those using more that the 500 kilowatts per month subsidized by Power Cost Equalization would enjoy greater savings.

Handeland along with utility board members Carl Emmons and Fred Moody last month paid a visit to Delta Junction to the private Delta Wind Farm operated by Mike Craft. Craft has installed several smaller Skystream units, such as will be installed at NACTEC and behind the Visitors Center in Nome, a Northwind 100 and two of the EWT-900s, the same as those installed in Kotzebue

The board has generally been resistant to wind generation, saying that the diesel generators would still have to be ready at expense for backup. This project would enable modifications to the whole plant setup and allow flexibility.

"With the addition of a 900K generator as well as making modifications to the diesel plant to allow us to use a variety of engines more appropriately sized to differing loads, we have the potential of saving over 500,000 gallons of diesel annually,"

Nome man charged with sexual abuse of a minor

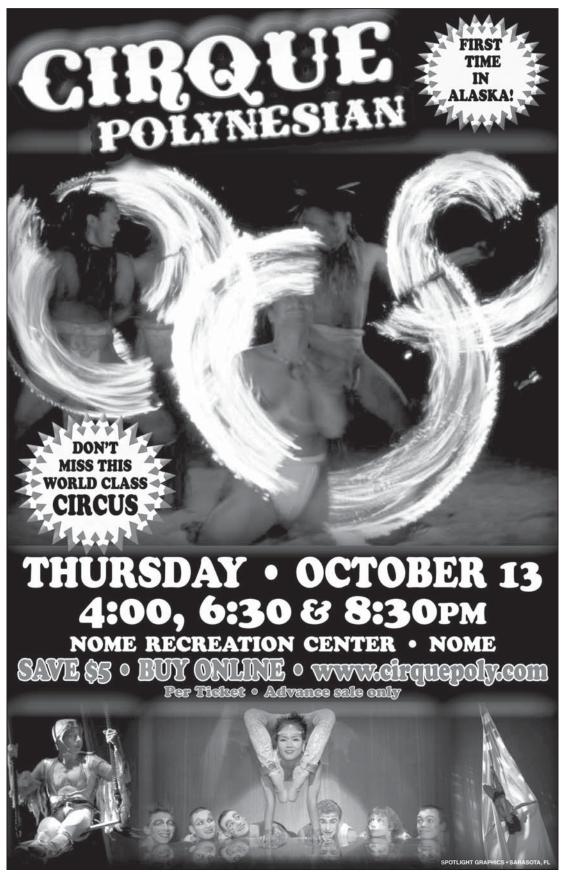

By Diana Haecker

A 57-year-old man was charged in the Nome Superior Court with one count of sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree. According to court documents, Vaughn Johnson is accused of sexually assaulting a nine-year old girl and penetrating her genitals with his penis.

The court complaint is based on Nome Police officers Andrew Schwartz' and Sgt. Byron Redburn's investigation. According to court papers, Johnson admitted to Sgt. Redburn that he had sexually abused the girl. The child is identified by its initials in court papers.

Sexual assault response team nurses conducted an examination of the girl and found vaginal tearing and redness.

Charges were filed on September 6. Johnson is scheduled to appear in court for a preliminary hearing on October 7, but hasn't entered a plea yet. Johnson is held at the Anvil Mountain Correctional Facility with bail set at $50,000

Handeland said, which could potentially save four cents a kilowatt in operating costs.

Once dead set against wind generation, Fred Moody, NJUS board member, wants to get going with the wind turbine—now. The trip to Delta Junction to see the turbine that NJUS is pursuing in action has him all sold. The EWT-900 shows operating attributes that would cut out some difficulties experienced with running turbines in arctic temperatures, Moody said.

Emmons wants to wait a little longer until potential bugs are worked out of the wind turbine.

"It was an impressive wind machine," Emmons agreed, but it is still in the first generation. "We should move ahead, but move cautiously. There is new technology introduced all the time."

"I can see no delay in the purchase of this windmill," Moody said. That in operation one does not have to be "frequency conscious" convinced him, he said. NJUS has learned that Wartsila diesel generators have to be kept at a specific frequency to have most efficient fuel

The two went eyeball-to-eyeball on the issue during the meeting and would continue during board comments and on the steps of Nome City Hall after the Sept. 20 board meeting's close.

'The bigger issue is whether the AEA is going to approve the project, Berda Willson, board president said.

With the high cost of oil and energy, I don't know how people are making it," she said. "I would hate to have to leave my home because I can't afford to live here.'

The current plan pares back a larger design when NJUS dreamed of putting up five 600 kilowatt turbines and in October 2008 sent an application to Alaska Energy Authority to fund the proposed $15.5 million project. The state offered a $4 million partial award for a wind turbine. NJUS has been studying alternatives that could be implemented on the capital project money available and would yield the biggest benefit to the community. The utility submitted an application for another round of funding under consideration by AEA that would pay for integration upgrades to put an alternative energy project into operation. The AEA has completed their review of the NJUS application, but waited until they could meet with NJUS and the folks performing the investigation of thermal energy at Pilgrim Hot Springs. The result of that meeting is Utility staff and consultants have come up with the plan for a single $1.9 million EWT-900 kilowatt generator-for now-that would save money and fuel, and could be integrated into wind production already on the system from Banner Wind Farm. They were additionally looking for a scope of work that would minimize any long-term damage and increased maintenance costs to the utility's 5.2 MW Wartsila diesel generators that happens when they operate at lower output when available wind power can be injected into the power grid.

Adding estimated logistics costs of $750,000, construction costs, and integration and controls, the proposed project estimate comes to around $6.47 million. That amount would require the $4 million from AEA, an NJUS match of $444,444 and an added $2 million contribution for integration activities.

Utility executives have laid out the plan for putting turbines at Banner Ridge with Banner Wind Farm executives.

A 3-megawatt transmission line already comes down the mountain to carry power to the NJUS grid. The Banner Wind turbines have a capacity of 1.9 megawatts, so there is capacity on this distribution line to support an additional 1.9 MW of wind generation equipment. (A megawatt is 1,000 kilowatts.) There is other infrastructure already in place: wind measurement equipment, a road from the highway up to the top of the mountain, and wind resource documentation.

In a letter to NJUS Manager John Handeland, Banner Wind's board chair, Roy Ashenfelter endorsed the NJUS application to AEA to see the greatest possible benefit from renewable energy and to join Banner Wind in decreasing the community's dependence on fossil fuel.

"We believe the cooperation between NJUS and Banner can serve as a model to other communities in the state," Ashenfelter said.

Going once, going twice, sold! The online auction of the Federal Building in Nome has come to an end, and the final bid of $1,681,001 produced a new owner of the building on Front Street.

General Services Administration spokeswoman Stephanie Kenitzer said that the auction closed at noon central time on Thursday, September 29. She said that the GSA estimates the closing approximately 90 days from when the bidding closed. "I cannot release any information on the new owner until all the paperwork is finalized," Kenitzer wrote in

The two-story building houses the Second District Superior Court offices, the U.S. Post Office, field offices for the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development and the Bureau of Land Management, a chiropractor office and other small entities like the Nome Kennel Club. The GSA lowered the initial bid price from a minimum bid of $300,000 to $100,000. The auction began June 8 but serious bidding didn't start until August 30. The auction went beyond its deadline of Sept. 1 when active bidding online continued to take place.

The building was constructed in 1958 to house federal agencies and courts. The GSA decided to sell the Nome Federal Building because it needs substantial renovations and there are not enough tenants, according to Kenitzer.

Chum bycatch rises sharply in Bering Sea pollock fishery

LOCAL

Slow fishing may extend B season harvest efforts through October

By Laurie McNicholas

The 2011 non-Chinook salmon bycatch in the directed Bering Sea pollock fishery totaled 164,803 fish through Sept. 24, reports Josh Keaton, inservice pollock fishery manager for the National Marine Fisheries Service. The figure exceeds the fishery's non-Chinook bycatch in the previous four years combined, which totaled 159,798 fish. However, this year's bycatch is well below those of peak years (2004-2006), when annual totals ranged from 308,318 to 703,991 non-Chinook salmon. Salmon are prohibited species in the directed pollock fishery, but they are caught in trawl nets by fishermen targeting pollock.

Chum salmon comprise 99 percent of the fishery's non-Chinook bycatch, so this report will refer to non-Chinook salmon bycatch as chum salmon bycatch. Virtually all chum bycatch takes place in the B season pollock fishery that opened on June 10 this year and will close Nov. 1.

Genetic analyses of chum bycatch in the pollock fishery in past years indicate the majority are Asian fish, an average 12 percent of adult equivalency are from coastal western Alaska, and western Alaska chums are prevalent in the bycatch in June and July. About half of the fishery's chum bycatch this year occurred in June and July.

A fisheries outlook report issued by NMFS in early September noted the B season pollock fishery continued to have a lower than normal catch rate compared to previous years. "With the smaller pollock quota in 2010 most sectors had harvested the majority of their B season allocation by September 11, 2010," the report stated. "In 2011 with the higher quota, at current harvest rates the pollock fishery may be fishing until November 1 to harvest their entire B season quota."

The 2011 total allowable catch for the fishery is 1.27 million metric tons, up more than 50 percent from 813,000 metric tons in 2010. This year 739,558 metric tons of pollock were allocated to the B season fishery. The B season pollock harvest totaled 574,514 metric tons through Sept. 24, according to a NMFS report.

Keaton described problems for the pollock fleet in slow fishing periods. "Catcher vessels hold pollock catches in refrigerated sea water for delivery to shoreside plants, and fish greater than three days old lose quality," he noted. "A plant does not want old fish." He said if it takes a catcher vessel 48 hours run time to reach the pollock grounds, the vessel can spend only one day fishing before returning to port whether on not it is full. "[The pollock] are there, but spread out," he said.

Keaton said catcher-processors process pollock in 12 hours, so they can bring in smaller amounts to keep processors working. However, he said when pollock are dispersed, a catcher-processor may have to leave its net in the water longer, and longer tows may take more chums.

NMFS reports show the 2011 bycatch of Chinook (king) salmon in the pollock fishery increased from a total of 7,924 fish through Aug. 20 to 10,988 Chinooks through Sept. 24. The pollock fleet usually takes most Chinook bycatch from January through April during the A season fishery. However, Chinook show up in increasing numbers on pollock grounds in October. A plan to manage and reduce Chinook salmon bycatch in the fishery, Amendment 91, was approved by the North Pacific Fishery Management Council in April 2009 and was implemented in January 2011. Amendment 91 requires that all salmon taken as bycatch in the fishery be retained and to manage and minimize chum salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery. The council reviewed an initial analysis of proposed alternatives for the plan at a meeting in June in Nome. After hearing western Alaskans describe the importance of chum salmon in local commercial and subsistence fisheries throughout the region, the council added the following option to an alternative.

"Option: Apply a hard cap (non-Chinook PSC catch limit) to vessels participating in the directed pollock fishery during June and July, in aggregate. This hard cap, if exceeded, would require all vessels affected by the cap to stop fishing until August 1." The council asked staff to revise the analysis and bring it back for initial review at a council meeting in April 2012 in Anchorage.

Chum bycatch management

Chum salmon bycatch currently is managed by the pollock industry under the Voluntary Rolling Hot Spot system approved by the council in 2007 (Amendment 84). The system is designed to reduce chum bycatch by moving the fleet away from areas where it is occurring. Sea State administers the program by compiling bycatch and location reports from vessels participating in the pollock fishery and from NMFS, and then closing areas of high bycatch called hot spots. Sea State closes a series of areas as salmon and pollock move around and hot spots are identified throughout the season.

The program involves intercooperative agreements with cooperatives formed under the 1998 American Fisheries Act. An intercooperative agreement must meet specific regulatory requirements under Amendment 84 to be accepted by NMFS. The AFA established four sectors in the directed pollock fishery: Inshore (catcher vessels delivering to shoreside processors); catcher-processor; mothership; and the Western Alaska

The AFA also allocated the annual pollock TAC among the sectors. Ten percent is allocated off the top to the CDQ program. After subtracting 10 percent for the CDQ program and 3 percent for an Incidental Catch Allowance, 50 percent of the remaining TAC is allocated to the inshore sector, 40 percent to the catcher-processor sector and 10 percent to the Community Development Program.

TAC is allocated to the inshore sector, 40 percent to the catcher-processor sector and 10 percent to the mothership sector, which includes a fleet of catcher-vessels. The CDQ pollock allocations are harvested either by catcher-processors or by catcher vessels that deliver to motherships.

John Gruver of United Catcher Boats manages the intercooperative agreement for the rolling hot spot system. He provided The Nome Nugget with copies of information on salmon bycatch data and hot spot closure areas that Sea State has supplied to the pollock fleet twice weekly throughout the B season. Sea State also compiles weekly and seasonal "dirty 20" lists of vessels with high bycatch rates.

Sea State announced a chum salmon bycatch closure area in a letter to the fleet dated June 16, 2011, six days after the B season opened. The letter said coops with a bycatch rate less than 0.143 salmon per metric ton of pollock are not affected by the closure, those with a bycatch rate greater than 0.143 but less than 0.238 salmon per metric ton are subject to a 4-day closure, and those with bycatch greater than 0.238 salmon per metric ton are subject to a 7-day closure. The letter listed five cooperatives as subject to a 7-day closure and three coops as not subject to the closure. (Base rates for salmon bycatch in relation to closures increased as the season progressed.)

Sea State subsequently expanded closure areas as chum salmon bycatch climbed. A letter from Sea State to the fleet dated June 27 reported a cumulative season bycatch of 35,311 chums and stated: "I won't go as far as to say that we have turned the tide, but the closure is certainly working."

In an effort to protect western Alaska chum stocks, Gruver said the pollock industry added an extra 1,000 square miles to 3,500 square miles of closure areas through mid-August when genetic information indicates chum salmon bound for western Alaska rivers are leaving the pollock grounds.

Gruver said bycatch taken by the fleet in June and July included chum salmon weighing 7.5 pounds that were moving through pollock grounds on their way to rivers. Salmon in the fishery's current bycatch include chums that are hanging around on pollock grounds, he added. He said he would like to get rid of foreign hatchery chums because they graze on zero age pollock and will reduce the fishery's future pollock quota.

"The pollock concentration is less and less as we get into fall," Gruver noted. "It's rarely better in October than September." He said a lot of salmon are on the grounds, and long tows result in higher bycatch. "It's hard to find pollock without salmon bycatch," he added. He said moving vessels out of areas with high chum bycatch may push them into areas with Chinook.

FIELD TRIP— Port commissioners (left to right) Jimmy Adams, Cam Kristenson, Charlie Lean, Jim West Jr., and Jeff Darling take a look at the newly acquired city property north of the barge ramp and discussed ways to expand the harbor with floating docks for small vessels in the area, during a port commission work session on Friday, Sept. 30.

City of Nome's harbormaster Joy Baker reports on last week's activities at the Nome small boat harbor and the Port of Nome. Last week saw lots of gold dredging activity in front of Nome, as the weather and Norton Sound waters were mostly calm.

Gravel barges continued to haul material to Alakanuk on Monday, Tuesday and the last barge bound for the Yukon village to deliver gravel left on Sunday afternoon. A private sailing yacht that came through the Northwest Passage arrived on Monday and left Wednesday. Village barges hauled freight to Yukon villages. The freight arrives in Nome with the mainline barges and is then taken to the outlying communities.

Thursday, Baker said, was a quiet day. On Friday and Saturday, village landing crafts arrived in Nome. The last barge from Northland Services has arrived in Nome. The last Alaska Logistics barge is scheduled to arrive in Nome between October 10 and 15, weather pending.

The Swiss sailing vessel Chamade arrived in Nome and its owners have hauled her out of the water and put her in storage here in Nome, to continue their journey next summer.

Baker led Port Commissioners on a tour of the facility during a work session on Friday afternoon, discussing potential land acquisitions behind the city's storage pad north of the port and the planned expansion of the inner harbor to accommodate docking space for small vessels.

Minimizing bycatch a top priority for Siu and its partners

By Tyler Rhodes, Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation and Siu Alaska Corp.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation, Siu Alaska Corporation and our harvesting partners are intently aware of the importance of each and every salmon that returns to our rivers for escapement, subsistence and commercial purposes. Minimizing the bycatch of both chum and Chinook salmon in the pollock fishery is not only a priority for NSEDC and Siu, it is also a guiding principle for the vessel captains who harvest our quota.

This commitment to low bycatch is evident in Siu-affiliated vessels' track record for a majority of the season in comparison to the rest of the pollock fleet. In seven out of 14 weeks from mid-June through mid-September, the cooperative representing Siu-affiliated shoreside vessels posted either the lowest or second lowest bycatch rate among shoreside co-ops in terms of low bycatch numbers. For 10 of those weeks, the cooperative to which the Glacier Fish Co. boats Alaska Ocean and Pacific Glacier belong posted the lowest rate of all co-ops. These two vessels in particular have outperformed the rest of the catchprocessor fleet in terms of bycatch. Additionally, the catcherprocessor cooperative led the fleet in low bycatch during June and July, a time period when chum bound for Western Alaska generally make up a higher proportion of the bycatch compared to later in the season. While Siu is proud to have its partners predominately be among the industry leaders in avoiding by-catch, for Siu and the affiliated captains it's not simply about competition, it's about doing the right thing.

Vessels in the shoreside fleet with ties to Siu, managed by Alaska Boat Co., have essentially finished their pollock season. This aligns with their pre-season goal to have their quota harvested by early to mid-September to minimize chances of taking Chinook salmon as bycatch, which generally occurs later in the season

Unfortunately, avoiding chum bycatch in the pollock fishery overall has been a challenge this season, and Siu-affiliated vessels have not been immune from the difficulty in staying clear of chum. Vessel captains reported a high abundance of chum throughout the fishing grounds, and have been working diligently and traveling far to avoid them. Despite their best efforts, however, some vessels have simply ended up making a tow in the wrong spot at the wrong time, resulting in an unanticipated and unintended high bycatch—a departure from the vessels' normal track record.

Siu's harvesting partners work hard at avoiding bycatch. All the boats participate in what is known as the Rolling Hot Spot program, which temporarily closes off certain areas to much of the fleet when bycatch in that area is found to be high. Given the high abundance of chum encountered in the pollock fishery this year, our partners agreed to a voluntary expanding of the hot spot area to further reduce the chances of bycatch. Since our partners' boats have predominantly had low bycatch rates, the program has allowed them to fish in these closed areas for most of the season. Even so, it is rare these boats will take that opportunity, opting instead to incur the expense of moving to other areas rather than risk high bycatch.

Our vessels rely on several sources of information before fully committing to fish an area. Captains communicate with each other about where they have encountered salmon. With web access on boats, captains can check on deliveries from different boats and areas to determine what, if any, bycatch was encountered by others. When fishing an area where the captain is uncertain of salmon abundance, Siu-affiliated vessels perform short 20-minute to half-hour test tows before putting forth a full effort. If a test tow shows salmon are on the grounds, our partners' boats will pack up and move several miles before trying again.

Many of our partners' vessels use salmon-excluding devices that are designed to keep salmon out of the nets. While these devices have been shown to divert as many as 40 percent of the Chinook salmon that may have otherwise ended up as bycatch, the results so far have not been as effective for chum salmon. Further work is slated to alter the excluders' design so they better address chum salmon bycatch.

Siu, NSEDC and our affiliated captains do not take bycatch lightly and are working to ensure that such instances are the exception rather than the rule as we endeavor to be associated with the cleanest fishing vessels in the industry. Our captains take pride in their efforts to avoid and minimize salmon bycatch as they work to deliver the revenues that ultimately support NSEDC's programs and services.

6.2 percent allocation of the annual pollock TAC and harvest NSEDC's CDQ pollock.

Early this year NSEDC's wholly owned, for-profit subsidiary, Siu Alaska Corp., and Coastal Villages Pollock formed BSAI Partners LLC to buy the assets of Alaska Boat Co. in Unalaska from Wards Cove Packing Co. BSAI Partners acquired 2.9 percent of the annual Bering Sea pollock TAC, one crab vessel and seven trawl vessels, five of which participate in the directed pollock fishery. The five pollock catcher vessels are the F/V Alaska Rose, F/V Bering Rose, F/V Destination, F/V Great Pacific and F/V Sea Wolf. All five deliver pollock catches to the Alyeska Seafoods processing plant at Unalaska.

NMFS posts weekly vessel specific prohibited species bycatch rates for the Bering Sea/Aleutians Islands and Gulf of Alaska areas at its website. The reports include estimated numbers of chum salmon and Chinook salmon taken by each vessel participating in the pollock fishery by week-ending-date throughout the A and B seasons. Keaton said data in the reports are based on sampled observed hauls and are good indicators of bycatch.

The reports show cumulative B season totals of estimated chum salmon bycatch for each of BSAI Partners' five catcher vessels through Sept. 17 as follows: Alaska Rose, 3,393; Bering Rose, 2,990; Destination, 1,722; Great Pacific, 1,795; and Sea Wolf, 921. Collectively the five boats took 10,821 chum salmon as bycatch through Sept. 17, about 46 percent of which occurred in June and July. Of the five, only the Alaska Rose harvested pollock in the week ended Sept. 24, and took only two chum salmon as bycatch.

In the week ended Sept. 10, the Bering Rose led the fleet in chum bycatch with 1,484 fish, and the Alaska Rose was second with 1.172 chums. The Bering Rose also topped Sea State's "dirty" list that week with a bycatch rate of 5.139 chums per metric ton of pollock, followed by the Alaska Rose with a bycatch rate of 3.792 chums per metric ton. These were exceptionally high weekly chum bycatches for both vessels. However, the Bering Rose appears on Sea State's "dirty 20" list for the season through Sept. 22 with a chum bycatch rate of .550 chums per metric ton of pollock.

The Alaska Ocean's chum bycatch totaled 2,745 fish through Sept. 17 and included unusually high weekly bycatches of 1,147 chums in the week ended July 30 and 605 chums in the week ended Aug. 13. The Pacific Glacier took a total of 1,730 chum salmon as bycatch in the B season through Sept. 17. In the week ended Sept. 24, the Alaska Ocean took 46 chums as bycatch, and the Pacific Glacier took 20.

This one is from eastern Norton Sound and likes to eat small worms and crustaceans on the seafloor. Over 22 different species of poachers live in Alaska.

Student attendance + Reading Mastery program = Success!

By Lori Head

The Nome Board of Education met, with all members present, on September 27, in a work session.

Read 90 update

"How's our Read 90 program going?" That's the question Dave Keller, principal of Nome Elementary School, is hearing. Keller informed the board that his staff has recently received training on their core curriculum, Houghton Mifflin, regarding differentiating the students among ranges of those needing to be challenged to those at-risk and functioning below their grade level.

Reading Mastery, the alternative reading readiness level experience is "emerging," the school is only "days into it," but Keller noted positive comments from teachers. However, addressing potential attendance issues, he commented, "We can have the greatest curriculum. Reading Mastery is a research-based program. And it's a proven program. But if students aren't here to take advantage of it, it doesn't matter how good the program is...Being here every day, on time, is so important."

Jeff Collins, Kindergarten teacher at NES, reported that he liked the fast-paced, instant gratification/instant correction the Reading Mastery program offered.

All grade levels are reading two hours per school day, some split the two hours into one hour before lunch and another hour in the afternoon. Every grade level is unique. Keller noted that the 4th graders have strong readers with most using the core curriculum of Houghton Mif-As far as placement in Houghton Mifflin or Reading Mastery, Keller explained that data makes that decision, not teachers. He was referring to student's DI-BELS (Dynamic Indicators of Basic Early Literacy Skills) scores and MAP (Measures of Academic Progress) assessments.

NPS communication process

Bob Whicker, Association of Alaska School Boards director of the Consortium of Digital Learning, met with staff and community prior to the board meeting regarding a communication process or system for Nome Public Schools. Whicker discussed external plans and devising a possible template to "get the word out" from school to stakeholders. He also mentioned internal plans of communication regarding school-to-school information. Board Member Betsy Brennan noted she would like to see Power Schools utilized more, or to the fullest. Whicker said using Power Schools offered challenges in one sense, benefits in another.

Brawner has begun a Superintendent Blog as a step in communicating with the community. It can be found at http://beltz.nomeschools.com/users/mbrawner/ or at the district's website by clicking on the "Superintendent Blog" link.

Strategic Plan update

Brawner presented a 30-page document, which contained Nome School District's Strategic Plan with updates. The plan includes goals from student learning to fiscal effectiveness. Originally developed in November 2010, Brawner's presentation focused on updates to specific goals, strategies, objectives or action steps. There were numerous accomplishments noted below various goals, as well as "no update at this time" comments regarding other goals, due to the scope of the plan. Brawner encouraged the board to look through it, determine areas of focus and priorities throughout October and then in November align the budget to the specific plan.

Alternate Governance Plan

Due to NPS not achieving Adequate Yearly Progress for several years, Keller explained that Nome Elementary School fulfilled a requirement for a Level 5 School by forming a committee of approximately 12 parents, teachers and administrators and designating fundamental reforms to improve student academic achievement. The board reviewed the reform activities including, but not limited to, "maintaining a lengthened day, curriculum mapping and alignment, focused classroom walk-throughs. utilizing the proven practices identified by the Kennewick, WA School District, focus on pre-school instruction, after-school tutoring, parent outreach and involvement, increase fidelity to core reading program, establish student-led parent-teacher conferences and improve student attendance." The plan was submitted to the Alaska Department of Education and Early Development in April 2011 and is being implemented this 2011-2012 school year.

BP 3512 Equipment

A portion of the BP 3512 Equipment policy states, "School equipment may be used by staff members and/or students only for school-related tasks.

Except when otherwise authorized by Board policy, personal use of district property is prohibited and may be cause for disciplinary action." Brawner informed the board that part of the negotiated agreement with school personnel does allow use of the Beltz gym during personal time. He offered to draft an Administrative Regulation clarifying exceptions to this policy for the board to review.

AASB Annual Conference

AASB's 58 Annual Conference will take place November 3-6 in Anchorage. The theme this year is "The New 3 R's: Relevance – Relationships – Results." There are sessions for experienced board members as well as a "boot camp" for newly elected members. Whicker encouraged the school board members to attend. Board member Betsy Brennan added that the time she has spent at past conferences has been very useful. There is also a Youth Leadership Institute held at the same time to which AASB encourages districts to send a school board student representative and/or a student who may benefit from leadership training.

The Nome Board of Education will meet again in a regular meeting on Tuesday, October 11 at 5:30 p.m. in Nome Elementary School's library.

Birth Announcements

2011 Connie Boochever Fellows announced

The Alaska State Council on the Arts and the Alaska Arts and Culture Foundation recently chose four individuals to receive the 2011 Connie Boochever Fellowships in the visual arts. The $2,500 fellowship is for emerging artists, and each year the disciplines alternate between performing, literary and visual arts.

The four recipients are:

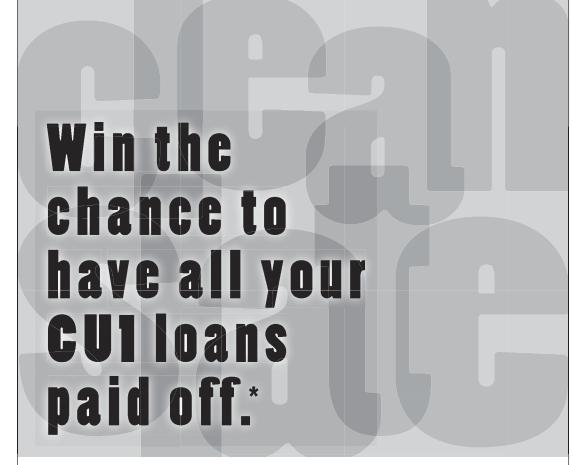

- James Adcox, visual artist, Nome;
- Michael Conti, photography and video, Anchorage;
- Ben Huff, photography, Juneau;
- Wendy Gingell, ceramic artist, Anchorage

The Connie Boochever Fellowship was established in 2001 by her family after her death to honor and reflect the spirited passion of the arts Mrs. Boochever consistently demonstrated.

Connie Boochever was an avid performer, director, and producer of community theater and a lifelong patron and advocate of the arts. Her crusading efforts gave the arts a voice in Alaskan government and she played a key role in advocating for passage of legislation mandating Percent for Art in Public Places. Connie's legacy can be seen in art installed in public buildings around the state.

PICKING YOUR POCKET—Auctioneer Ron Alleva warned the bidders that an auctioneer by definition can pick one's pocket with his tongue. Alleva showed his skill during last week's DNR offshore lease sale at Old St. Joe's Hall. The auction brought more than $9 million into the state's coffers.

LOCAL BIDDER— Miner Mike Benchhoff, holding up number sign 196, actively bid during the outcry auction as well as the sealed bid auction.

MINERS AND TRAPPERS? — DNR official Kerwin Krause, right, explains paperwork to a bidding participant sporting an eccentric piece of head fashion.

PACKED— Old St. Joe's Hall was packed with active bidders and spectators during the first DNR offshore lease auction since 1999.

EXCITEMENT IN THE AIR — Miners mingled prior to the delayed start of last week's DNR auction as the plane carrying auction officials to Nome arrived an hour late.

AngloGold Ashanti to conduct offshore geophysical surveys

The Nome Nugget interviewed Alan Fine with AngloGold Ashanti in South Africa via email to introduce the company that successfully bid on several large offshore lease tracts during last week's DNR lease sale. Following are AngloGold's answers to the Nugget's questions.

Nome Nugget: We would like to share with our readers who the major players are that participated in last week's offshore lease sale. While some companies have a history here in Nome, yours seems to be a new addition AngloGold Ashanti: There is a definite historic link between West-Gold and AGA. What has changed since the WestGold days is the gold price and the mining technology.

Nome Nugget: AngloGold Ashanti submitted various bids on offshore lease tracts during the lease sale last Wednesday. I understand that AuruMar is also involved. Which company will be exploring and extracting gold? AGA: AuruMar is the technical AGA: AuruMar is the technical services company that will coordinate all work on the leases on behalf of the lease owners and will be present in Nome during the working season.

Nome Nugget: What are the company's plans to move forward with the newly acquired leases?

AGA: Our plan is to transfer the leases into an Alaskan corporation in which our marine gold exploration partner De Beers will have an interest and then to contract AuruMar to conduct a geophysical survey over the newly acquired lease area during the summer of 2012 followed by sampling during 2013 and 2014. The information acquired will assist us to make decisions around the scale and timing of mining.

Nome Nugget: When will you start (exploration or extraction)?

AGA: As stated above, exploration will start in 2012.

Nome Nugget: What kind of equipment will you be using and what work force would be needed to operate it?

AGA: For the geophysical survey we will be going out on tender and preference will be given to North American companies that are familiar with the operating conditions in the Bering Sea. For the sampling operations we will follow a similar route of subcontracting the work to local expertise.

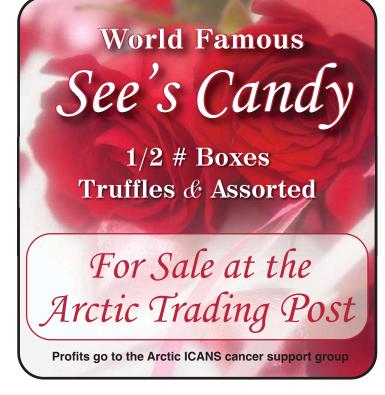

Nome Nugget: Are you planning to open an office in Nome during the months of operation?

AGA: Early days – but we probably will have a small office in Nome during the summer.

Nome Nugget: What would you like the people of Nome to know about your company and your

AGA: First of all, prior to the exploration work in 2012 the plan would be to meet with the local Nome organizations and key interested and affected parties to introduce ourselves and explain what our plans are. We would then also be in a position to explain more clearly our needs with regard to local hire (people, equipment and facilities). We think the people of Nome should see it is a positive step that a large international gold mining company has acquired a portion of the offshore leases in Nome because it could lead to a longer-term commitment of mining and subsequent positive impacts on the local economy.

How do I know if my child has strep throat?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Strep throat is one of the most common causes of a sore throat in children over age five. Identifying strep throat is important because early treatment can reduce transmission to other people and help prevent the harmful effects of untreated streptococcal infections.

Strep throat, called streptococcal pharyngitis, causes pain and inflammation in the back of the throat. It is caused by the bacteria Group A Streptococcus (strep for short). Left untreated, the strep bacteria can cause rheumatic fever that affects the joints and heart. The bacteria can also cause ear infections, pharyngeal cellulitis, or an abscess in the back of the throat.

Strep is transmitted from person to person on the droplets of mucus and saliva of people who are infected with the bacteria. Sometimes people carry the bacteria and pass it to others without having symptoms or even knowing they are infected.

Transmission of strep is prevented by hand washing and using only personal utensils or dishes. Keeping toys clean helps prevent transmission among children.

Doctors use two lab tests to help distinguish strep throat from other causes of a sore throat. Both tests require a simple throat swab. The first is called the Rapid Strep test, which takes about ten minutes. This test may not catch all cases of strep, especially early in the course of illness; therefore a second test, called a culture, is sometimes performed. Growing bacteria in a culture takes extra time, and results are usually available in three days.

Though a lab test is the only sure way to determine whether a person has strep throat, several symptoms, if present, make strep easier to spot fore the lab test is performed. People with strep tend to de-DOCTOR velop a s u d d e n sore throat with fever s w ollen lymph nodes in the neck. The throat often looks beefy red with a white looking drainage coming from the tonsils. Sometimes little red spots develop on the back portion of the palate. Interestingly, older children and adults who catch strep rarely have a cough. A cough in the setting of a sore throat is usually a sign of a viral cause of the sore throat.

There are a variety of antibiotics available for treating strep throat. Usually patients have a choice between an injection and a course of pills. The best option is a matter of opinion and personal preference. In general, either approach is equally effective. Treatment helps shorten the course of the illness. More importantly, treatment reduces the chances of a secondary infection, like rheumatic fever, by up to 70 per-

Tonsillectomy, surgically removing the tonsils, is no longer considered an effective treatment for strep throat but may be recommended for cases of recurrent tonsillitis.

Anyone treated for strep throat is considered contagious until 48 hours after beginning treatment. It is a good idea to change toothbrushes, wash bathroom cups, and clean toys as soon as treatment is started to prevent re-infection or transmission to

A focus on breast cancer in October

By James N. Martin, Jr, MD President, The American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists

Breast cancer is the second most common cause of cancer deaths among women in the US. It's not surprising that a diagnosis of this disease is a fear many women share. However, being informed about the risk factors, detection, and treatment of breast cancer can help empower women to move beyond fear and into action.

The two main risk factors for breast cancer are being a woman and getting older. Family history, personal history of certain cancers, no pregnancies or first pregnancy later in life, starting periods before age 12 or menopause at age 55 or after, obesity, alcohol intake, and use of some types of hormone therapy can also increase a woman's risk.

While some risk factors including age and family history are beyond your control, others such as weight and the amount of alcohol you drink, can be improved. You can learn more about your risk of breast and other cancers at understandingrisk.cancer.gov.

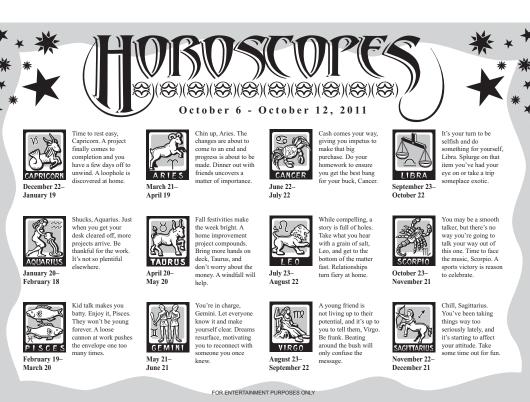

Women with breast cancer have up to a 98 percent survival rate when it is caught at an early stage. Earlier detection and advances in treatment have led to the gradual decrease in breast cancer deaths. Mammography screening remains the best available method to detect breast cancer early. Regular mammograms are crucial to identifying tumors when they are most treatable, but unfortunately, many women skip being screened.

ACOG recommends that all women ages 40 and older should have a mammogram annually. If you have certain risk factors, such as being a carrier of the BRCA1 or BRCA2 gene, your doctor may suggest mammography screening at a younger age. High-risk women should discuss their prevention options with their doctors. For information on where you can find free or low-cost mammography screenings, go to cdc.gov/can-

Women ages 40 and older should also have their breasts examined by their doctor annually. Women ages 20 - 39 should have this done every one to three years. Additionally, all women ages 20 and older should become familiar with the normal appearance and feel of their breasts and tell their doctor if they notice any change.

There are currently a number of effective treatment options available for breast cancer. Ultimately, a woman and her doctor will choose the treatment that is right for her, based on the location and extent of the cancer, her age and preferences, and the risks and benefits of each treatment.

As a national sponsor of National Breast Cancer Awareness Month in October, ACOG encourages women to focus on breast health now. For more information and resources on breast cancer, treatment options, and where you can find support, go to nbcam.org.

NACTEC students explore career opportunities

On August 30, junior high students from Koyuk and Brevig Mission met at the NACTEC House for a fun-filled week of career exploration. While the students were attending NACTEC they completed many career interviews to learn about different jobs. Below, Koyuk students write about different careers they explored.

While we were at NACTEC we went to the Norton Sound Seafood Products plant or NSSP for short. As we walked in the smell was very disgusting! Then, after awhile we got used to it. When we got to the place where they handled the fish it was awesome! There were lots of halibut, they had really sharp teeth. Then Demolo showed us around. He showed us where they keep their equipment like the machine to help process fish. Then we went outside to meet a fishing crew from Brevig Mission. After we got done asking some questions, Demolo took us into a really big freezer where they stored their fish. It was really cold and all the students were shivering. Then when we went back inside to do our interview I learned that we don't need to go to college for this career and that the pay is good. —Thomas Tocktoo, Grade 7, Koyuk

At NACTEC, students from Brevig Mission and Koyuk Malimiut School went to the Nome Museum to interview Cheryl and Amber, the museum workers. We learned that museum workers need to be organized. We also learned they need to study math, reading and science. To be a museum worker you have to like talking to people. When all the students were done asking their interview questions, we got to look around the museum. I liked this career, but my mind is set on becoming a teacher. We watched a short clip of the musher Leonard Seppala and his lead dogs Fritz and Togo. In a glass box there is the lead dog Fritz. Students looked at Fritz and stared into his eyes. Some kids thought it was freaky. We had a fun visit to the museum. - Angel Charles, Grade 7,

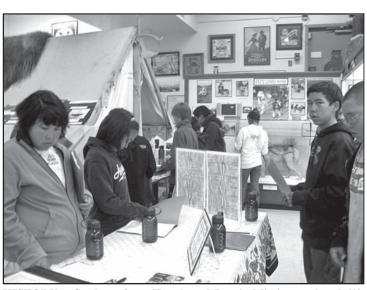

"Mmmm, this is good," said the NACTEC students while they were at Landon's. At Landon's we were asking questions to Cindy. Cindy is a business owner. She told us that she has to be nice to each and every customer. Cindy has to take people's orders and make smoothies. She said that useful courses for this career were classes in speech and math. Cindy answered all of our interview questions. After we wrote our answers down, we got our smoothies. It was a lot of fun! — Bradley Thiemeyer, Grade 6, Koyuk

At NACTEC the students had to do interviews. One of the students' favorite interviews was the National Guard. The building was cool because it was big. And the students' favorite was the Black Hawk helicopter. It was big and cool! The gas tank was shaped like a missile. We got to sit in the pilot's seat. As I walked into the pilot's seat with my friend Louis, I was amazed. I liked seeing all the buttons up front. I thought the Black Hawk was cool because I want to become a pilot like my dad was. We learned that if we want to be in the National Guard we have to go out of state to train. We also learned that it is hard work to fly a helicopter.

After we toured the helicopter and learned about the National Guard, we said goodbye to the soldiers who showed us around, Sergeant Frank and Sergeant Johnson. —William Swanson, Grade 7, Koyuk HISTORY— Students from Koyuk and Brevig Mission explored different career opportunities during their NACTEC visit in Nome. Here they are checking out Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum.

SMELLS FISHY— The students also had a chance to visit the Norton Sound Seafood Plant for insights on career opportunities the fishing industry offers.

COFFEE BREAK ANYBODY? — The students also explored the food industry's career opportunies when they visited Landon's at the airport.

Obituary

Samuel Kapok Atuk

Samuel Kapok Atuk, second child of Walter and Virginia Atuk, was born in the family home at Cape Prince of Wales on November 17, 1935. Sammy died as peacefully as he lived his life, on September 13, 2011. He leaves to celebrate his life and mourn his passing his brothers and sisters Norman, Laura Hunter, Richard, Alice Atuk, Rose Atuk Fosdick, and Caroline Atuk-Derrick, and many nieces, nephews, friends and relatives. He was preceded in death by his parents Walter Atuk and Virginia Ayona Tungwenuk Atuk, his siblings Linda, Clara May, Gladys, Eugene and Ellen. Sam mourned the passing of his Uncle Buster Seelkoke, and cousins Isaac, Henry, and Helen Seelkoke.

The Atuk family moved to Nome from Wales in 1948 after they spent the winter at Sinruk enroute to Nome.

Sam attended Nome Public Schools. He learned to love sports, especially playing high school basketball with the Nome Nanooks — they won the state championship in the late 1950s. He also played with the majestic Polar Hornets in the Nome City League, with their flashy green warm ups.

Sam joined the US Army and served in post-war Korea at Inchon following training at Fort Ord, California.

A favorite early memory is of Sam sitting next to a big wooden box radio listening to baseball; he also loved fishing, playing expert pool, and teasing his nieces and nephews.

After serving in the military, he returned to Nome where he lived the rest of his life. In Nome, Sam worked as a mechanic for various businesses such as Green's, Bonanza, Nome Cab and as a grader operator for the Department of Highways.

Sam was depended upon by his mom, Virginia, to transport her, her children, tent, clothes, food and gear to fish camp at Nuuk or go to berrypicking camp at Camp Nome. Sam's trucks needed his constant attention but he worked hard to keep them available to his family. He always took care of his mom and dad's needs, and he remained loyal and supportive of his five younger sisters his whole life. For his brother Richard he kept the old red van in repair for use by the family and he helped Richard work on his house (pounding nails on the house into the wee hours of the morning until the police finally came to quiet them).

Sam and long-time companion Martha Richard delighted in the nieces and nephews and gave nicknames to some (Baboosie, Sasrqaq and Little Man). Sam and Martha loved to go out in the country and had many good laughs and good times together.

Sam spent his last years at Quyana Care Center in the loving care of the nurses, doctors, and nursing home staff. He was a beloved son, brother, uncle, companion and friend.

Nanook girls and boys post good times at state cross country meet

This weekend brought the season to a conclusion for the Nome-Beltz Nanook cross country team. They competed as complete boys and girls teams with an excellent outcome. The meet took place at Bartlett High School on a clean hilly course that offered quick times and personal records for each member of the Nanook squad. The day presented cool cloud covered temperatures with no wind, a perfect day for each of the runners from the windy town of Nome. And that they finish in a time of 19:58. Her previous time was 21:19.

Hannah Tozier followed in 27th place with a time of 22:13 - six seconds short of a two minute improvement from the start of the year. Senior Caitlin Tozier was third in for the Nanook with a time of 25: 15. Her previous time on this course was 26:33. Neither Jannelle Trowbridge or Andrea Irrigoo competed at the early season meet at Bartlett High School, but both posted their fastest time by over three minutes from any previous Nanook efforts with a third place meet, with Jannelle completing the course in 27:40 and Andrea finishing in 32:41. The ladies took eighth place as a team, their highest placing in three years.

The boys were led by Tim Schmidt, who was the top Region I finisher in a time of 17:52. This was his first time competing on the Bartlett course. He was followed by senior Jens Irelan in 19:23, a two minute improvement, and sophomore Junyor Erikson in 19:29, a one minute twenty second improvement. Freshman Michael Lyon came in fourth for the Nanooks in a time of 20:00. He has been a continued success for the Nanooks, rising to the responsibility of a scoring runner after freshmen Oliver Hoogendorn injured himself in Kotzebue. Coming in fifth was Nick Morgan in 20:23, a two minute and twenty nine second improvement since the beginning of the year. Freshman Jason Gilder and Gabe Smith rounded out the Nanook harriers with their first visit to a State Championship with times of 22:09 and 22:34. The boys team took ninth place.

The Nanooks had the opportunity to preview the state course at the beginning of the season. Improvements are reported based on their time from that first meet and the Alaska State Cross Country Championship. Coach Busk and Coach Collins thank all the parents, community members, NSEDC, The Nome Nugget, KICY, KNOM, school personnel, and each member of the 2011 Nanook Cross Country team for providing moments of relief, exhilaration, excitement, and sanity throughout a wonderful season. They look forward to the greatness that will be the 2012 season.

According to court papers, 11-year-old Mike Ahkinga Jr. was absent 54 days during the first half of the 2010-2011 school year and the previous years also showed gaping holes in the student's attendance record. Mike Jr. was absent 27 days and present 58 days in the 2008/2009 school year. In the 2009-2010 school year Mike, Jr. skipped 13.5 school days.

In April of this year, Alaska State Troopers were asked to check on the situation. Mike Ahkinga, Sr. told Trooper Aileen Witrosky that Mike Jr. was sick and that he suspects something had happened at school, but that the child won't talk to him about it. According to the charging papers, the Wales school has set up a plan that included that Ahkinga, Sr. would shadow his son to school. Ahkinga Sr. followed through with the plan for only a couple of days and then stopped shadowing his son.

"Coming to school everyday isn't my style," the father responded when the trooper asked him why he didn't take his son to school anymore. The father added that he had tried everything with his son, but that the child still refused to go to school.

Let the fluoride begin, again

By Sandra L. Medearis

Without flap and ado, the Nome Common Council took action Oct. 10 to restart the process of fluoridating NJUS customers who drink water from Nome's public water supply.

Water from Moonlight Springs has not contained fluoride for several months since the fluoridation equipment broke down. Nome Joint Utility board members with the exception of one member voted to stop fluoridation and sent such a resolution to the Council for approval. The NJUS' utility manager, John K. Handeland, has saddled the fence on the issue, but did forward the resolution to the Council for its meeting Sept. 26 where the Council took no action

Councilman Jerald Brown at

Monday's regular meeting vowed to raise the fluoride question at every meeting from now on until the issue was resolved. He said an ordinance on the books calling for fluoridation should continue to be enacted or changed, or, if the issue were to be studied, the fluoridation should continue during the study.

Brown has stated that he favors the fluoride treatments because he has a five-year-old daughter for whom the medication may reduce cavities.

Councilman Stan Andersen proposed a straw vote then and there. Going around the table, Brown, council members Randy Pomeranz, Josie Stiles and Andersen said they favor restoring the fluoridation.

Boyfriend arrested for murder of 21-year-old Nome woman

By Diana Haecker

Nome Police arrested Shawn Oquilluk, 21, and charged him with one count of murder in the first degree for killing his girlfriend Marie Pushruk, 21, in the early morning hours of Friday, Oct. 7.

Marie Pushruk was found dead on her bedroom floor. Police say she appeared to have been strangled to death and her body showed signs of finger marks on her neck. The responding police officer found Oquilluk laying next to Pushruk's body, holding her hand. Oquilluk was covered in blood, had lacerations on his arm and a bloody steak knife stuck in the floor. He was taken to Norton Sound Hospital before being arrested for murdering his girlfriend.

Oquilluk was indicted on Saturday afternoon. According to court papers, the killing took place at a rented onestory home on East Third Avenue in

Dear Editor,

Hi! I wanted to share with the community the importance of decision-making. Not only do you feel good about making a decision that you know is worth it but you learn, grow and expand during the process.

You have references and life experience from good decision-making and that allow you to make more and more good decisions so that it becomes second nature, and your life takes on enlightenment and becomes enhanced.

I wasn't aware of this until recently learning to make better decisions so that I cannot claim ignorance for the rest of my life, because that's something that I've been doing for years plus making bad decisions, and that combination has led me nowhere except for prison.

I chose to make a deadly decision that put many in the community of Nome in danger and at risk of serious physical harm or quite possibly death. I'm not proud of that decision that I made almost six years ago, that put members of the Nome community at risk of serious physical harm.

Instead of focusing my time and energy into victimizing and taking away from my community, I've channeled my energy towards helping to make my community a better, safer place to live. There comes a

The Darker Side

We live in a wonderful community with some of the world's finest people, but we have a problem. As we enter into the darker days of winter and the easy PFD cash, we find the problem escalates. Alcohol is a problem for too many folks in western Alaska. Nomeites have volunteered their personal time to patrol our streets and look after the personal safety of visitors and fellow Nomeites who are too drunk to look out for themselves. We have to figure out a way to get past this accursed situation.

There is no easy answer. There is no single answer. There is no simple answer. The problem has to be attacked on many fronts. One is to not drink, easier said than done, and has to be on a personal choice level. Another is to educate about the medical impairments and birth defects caused by alcohol. We can also strictly enforce alcohol sales to inebriated and underage persons. We can see that alcohol is not imported into dry communities. We can spread the word that it is not socially acceptable to urinate, defecate and vomit on the sidewalks of Nome. Businesses should not have to clean up the frozen messes. Alcohol causes many domestic disturbances and lives are lost, families hurt, friends grieve and wonder why. This is such a tragic waste.

How can we discourage abuse? Perhaps known alcohol abusers should have their PFDs held in an escrow account with some funds diverted to the municipal police and emergency services who have to respond to the problem drunks and the violence. Funds could also be diverted to educational savings accounts for the children of the abusers. We need to fight alcohol abuse on all fronts, home, school, church and community. We have to get a handle on alcohol, but it sure has a handle on us. It casts a long, dark shadow on all of us.

Juneau mayor starts Coastal Zone initiative

Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho, Kenai Peninsula Borough assemblyman Mako Haggerty and Kodiak Island Borough Mayor Jerome Selby sponsored a citizen's initiative to come up with a the coastal zone management plan tailored to Alaska. During the last legislative session, the legislature and the governor couldn't reach common ground on extending the program that gave Alaskans a voice in decisions made by industry and the federal government that affect coastal communities. "Without a coastal management plan, Alaskans lose local control. This initiative would give Alaskans a significant say in how their resources get developed," said Botelho. According to APRN, the Lieutenant Governor has received a petition application with the required hundred signatures for a ballot question that would put a new Coastal Management program back before the legislature — or the public next year.

Murkowski hires new fisheries advisor

U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski selected Stefanie Moreland to be her legislative aide covering fisheries issues and Arctic matters. Moreland replaces Murkowski's former fisheries legislative aide Arne Fuglvog who pleaded guilty to a charge of overfishing in one area and falsifying fishing reports. Murkowski said that Alaska's fisheries are one of the state's largest economic drivers and that Alaska needs a smart, strong advocate. She praised Moreland's expertise. Moreland has been with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, where she most recently served as the federal fisheries coordinator, extended jurisdiction program manager and economist. Prior to that, she worked for the Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission. She holds a Bachelor's Degree from University of Minnesota-Twin Cities and a Master's in Resource and Applied Economics from University of Alaska-Fairbanks.

Two men found guilty of Bethel murder

A gory murder case came to an end last week when Jeffrey Hout, 47, of Bethel, and Harry Williams, 33, of Kwethluk were found guilty of second-degree murder of 19-year-old Benjamin Kaiser of Hooper Bay. The jury turned in their guilty verdicts Thursday morning. The jury also found both men guilty of kidnapping. Hout was additionally found guilty of tampering with physical evidence. Kaiser was found tied to a table saw, beaten and tortured prior to his death, in late October 2010.

Four arrested in contracting

Two Army Corps of Engineers contracting officers and a director of contracts for the Cordova Alaska Native Corporation EyakTek were arrested for conspiracy, bribery and unlawful kickbacks last week. Federal law enforcement officials said the scam involved delivered and promised kickbacks of about $20 million on what they described as substantial contracts for critical technology services. The lawyer for EyakTek executive Harold Babb asked for a few more days before making his argument as to why Babb should be released on bond

Public Health Centers have adult flu vaccine on-hand

The Alaska Division of Public Health said they have approximately 5.500 doses of adult flu vaccine and distributed them to most public health centers around the state. The vaccine is targeted for adults over 65, those at higher risk for serious flu complications, and those without other access to the vaccine. Cost for the vaccine is $40.

Vaccine is now available at Public Health centers including Nome, Bethel and Kotzebue. Itinerant nurses will also have small supplies with them as they travel through the

This year's vaccine is formulated to protect against the three primary circulating strains of the flu, including H1N1.

Survey says Alaskans are spending rather than saving their PFD

Roughly twice as many Alaskans say that they going to spend all of their PFD this year rather than save all of it, according to Northern Economics' quarterly Alaska Consumer Confidence Index survey. Roughly 40 percent of respondents said that they would spend all of their PFD, compared to 20 percent who said they would save all of it.

Those who said they would be spending at least some of their PFDs were asked whether they would be paying bills or engaging in new spending. The group who said they would be paying bills outnumbered the new spending group by more than 2-to-1.

Nome. Court documents say that Oquilluk and Pushruk were romantically involved and shared a bedroom. The charging document says that their roommate Garret Savok came home on Friday morning at 8:45 a.m. and found the house barricaded from the inside. He took a ladder to Oquilluk's and Pushruk's bedroom and banged on the window. Oquilluk answered the door and let his roommate inside. Savok then saw that Oquilluk was covered in blood and that the living room and kitchen had blood everywhere.

Savok alerted the Nome Police Department.

Police later seized a video camera that belonged to the accused. Footage taken before 3 a.m. Oct. 7 showed Pushruk sitting at the kitchen table, drinking a beer and receiving a text message. Video taken later that morning showed bloody bedroom walls and Oquilluk speaking into the camera, saying that his little brother should not do what his big brother had done. Other footage shows Oquilluk playing a guitar next to Pushruk's body.

According to court documents, Oquilluk stated that he did not remember what he had done to Pushruk.

Oquilluk is held at Anvil Mountain Correctional Center with bail set for $50,000. A public defender has been appointed. Magistrate Brad Gater was assigned to judge the case. A preliminary hearing is set for Oct. 17.

Let the fluoride begin, again

Councilwoman Mary Knodel said she did not. Andersen said that absent and unsworn new councilmember Louis Green Sr. favored fluoride. The fluoride will start again following a 4-1 "opinion" on the issue, and the City ordinance followed.

"It wasn't a vote," Anderson said, "just a straw poll."

The City will accept an offer from Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium to provide fluoride, equipment and training, if needed, to continue fluoridating residents, as ANTHC favors fluoridating water to reduce tooth decay.

In other action, the Council tightened requirements for taxicab, or chauffeur's licenses. The fee will rise from $5 to $50 for license applications and renewals if the renewal application is received 30 days before the license expires. For renewals closer to the expiration date than 30 days, the action raises the fee to $75.

Additionally the new measure requires chauffeur's license applicants to furnish a copy of criminal history no later than within seven days of the application. The amended ordinance, approved unanimously, spells out the criminal offenses for which a license can be denied and shortens the history of convictions of certain crimes. including sex crimes, drug offences, crimes against persons and "vice squad" related offences-prostitution and promotion of prostitution, to the past three years for denial. The action also sets criteria for medical exams, carrying a medical certificate and proof of up-to-date vehicle inspection. Addiction to alcohol or controlled substances as determined through criminal history, background investigation or any other way would also keep applicants out of the driver's seat. The intent of the measure is to make City of Nome requirements coincide with state licensing rules. The newly amended ordinance is on file at Nome City Hall.

Mayor Denise Michels passed on to the Council a letter from Loretta Bullard, president of Kawerak, Inc., concerning the organization's desire to lease space in the upcoming Richard Foster Building for Kawerak's Beringia Center of Culture and Science facility. Bullard stated an interest in meeting with the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum staff and Nome Common Council to discuss mutual benefits in sharing operating expenses, reducing the cost of hiring specialized staff like curators and building managers and sharing climate controlled spaces for storing artifacts. Kawerak requested that they participate in the new building's design process to ensure it meets their needs. Bullard came with a possible offer in hand-that Kawerak could donate its 28,000 square foot lot on Seppala Drive as an in-kind contribution to construction.

The City has issued a request for proposals for land for the Foster building at the discussion level and received interest from the Louis Green, Sr. family, Alaska Gold Co., King Island Native Corp., and the letter from Kawerak. The last two came in after the deadline.

"We are not going to limit these things. Let's consider King Island and the Kawerak to play fair all the way around," Knodel said. Under funding issues, Josie Bahnke, city manager, told the Council that she had been working with the City's lobbyists to schedule a work session to discuss state and federal legislative priorities, with a tentative date of Nov. 14. Knodel suggested that the City get prepared ahead of a meeting.

"I want to talk about it so we have unity in what we are asking for," Knodel said. She noted that based on the energy price pinch and Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell recently saying that the state needs to loan cities money for energy cost-relief projects, that Nome add money to the wish list for exploring a pocket of natural gas off shore

"Energy cost is going to kill this town," she said. "We need to be more proactive. One windmill won't do it. People are leaving because energy is so high."

Michels commented that the City used to be limited to Wells Fargo for borrowing money, but this would mean another option.

In other discussion, the Council:

• Heard that the Alaska Municipal League Board of Trustees has named Nome Police Chief John Papasodora to the Police Professional Advisory Committee for a term of two years.

• Vowed to ask the state Assessor's Office for an explanation of why Nome's taxable real and personal property within the municipality has risen to $326,939,700 from year 2010's figure of $302,947,600. The 2010 figure shows a decrease of $11,807,500 compared to 2009's figure of $314,755,100.

 Passed a resolution of support for an application by Port of Nome/City of Nome to Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. for $193,126 for small boat harbor improvements. The money would pay for construction of a functioning anchor system to ensure stability of float systems and safety of boats during storms and surges in the harbor. The City has already spent $91,000 for design and materials. Additionally, the city opened bids Oct. 7 for a port lighting upgrade, the High Mast Lighting Project in a range of $897,000 to $1,085,105 with ASRC Builders, a subsidiary of Arctic Slope Regional Corp. coming in the lowest. The bid has not been awarded yet.

- Accepted a right-of-way easement from Panama Ventures, LLC, on Nathan's Loop Road in Panorama View Subdivision on the Anvil Mountain area. The action resulted in the City accepting responsibility for road maintenance.
- Has extended a memorandum of understanding with Matthew Johnson, as chief of Nome Volunteer Fire Dept.
  - Heard with dismay that Community Safety Officer Lance Cannon had resigned from NPD. Bahnke said the position was unbudgeted, that summer was over and the kids back in school. Stiles and Knodel said that they had thought the position was permanent. No one froze to death in the summer, but they freeze to death in the winter, Knodel remarked. "I want to see this person on the streets," she said. Papasodora, police chief, said Cannon had gone for another opportunity in keeping with career goals and felt he did not have the training officer safety issues. City administration will consider training opportunities and budget before recruiting another Community Safety Officer.

• Learned that Camille Ten Eyck, deputy city clerk, had resigned effective Oct. 21.

Newly-elected Council candidate Louis Green Sr. had to miss the meeting because of family duties. The Council expects him to be sworn in at the next meeting.

Election results are official in Nome and the Northwest Arctic Borough

North Slope Borough heads to runoff elections to determine mayor

By Diana Haecker

The Nome Common Council last Thursday canvassed the results of the municipal election held on October 4 for the Gold Rush City. Up for election were the Mayor of Nome, two council seats, two uncontested utility board seats and two school board seats.

Denise Michels won another two years in office with 421 votes. Michels was the only candidate until Janice Doherty started a late write-in campaign only days prior to the election. Doherty garnered 278 votes. Other write-ins included three votes for Stan Andersen, who is a council member, and four votes for Louise Walcott. Altogether there were 14 write-ins for mayor, including a write in for Ted Nugent.

Common Council seat A, a threeyear term, went to incumbent Mary Knodel, with 524 votes. Challenger Nikolai Ivanoff garnered 214 votes. There were nine write-ins. Council Seat B went to challenger Louis Green Sr. who beat incumbent Jim West Jr. by 143 votes. Green Sr. got 443 votes, West Jr. received 300. Ted Nugent was again a write-in for Seat B, as were 10 other names, including Nome's Alaska House Representative Neal Foster. Utility Board Seat A went with 680 votes to unchallenged incumbent Pat Johanson with 21 write-ins, Mickey Mouse among them. Utility Seat E also went to unchallenged incumbent Carl Emmons, with 26 write-ins, including Emmon's pet reindeer Velvet Eyes.

School Board Seat A saw an upset as incumbent Marie Tozier lost to Jennifer Reader. Reader received 484 to serve on the board for the next three years, Tozier got 272 votes. School Board Seat B went to incumbent Barb Nickels with 405 votes over challenger Gina Thomas, who received 348 votes. Six write-ins were cast for that particular seat, including the name of Mortimer Snerd,

The Nome Nugget's juvenile office terrier

The Northwest Arctic Borough also canvassed election results for three Assembly members and four School Board members. For District 3, Seat E, Clyde Ramoth Sr. won with 1,342 votes. District 5 saw three candidates with Lucy Nelson winning with 598 votes. Nasruuk Carl Weisner got 550 votes, Clement Richards Sr. 309 votes. District 5, Seat H saw a tight race between Roswell Schaeffer, Sr. and Walter Sampson. Schaeffer won with 725 votes to Sampson's 721. The four successful School Board candidates were Sandy Shroyer Beaver for Seat G with 941 votes, Angela Washington for Seat H with 745 votes, Margaret Hansen for Seat J with 866 votes and Daisy Lamber for Seat K with 824 votes.

Voters also had to cast their 'yea' or 'nay' for one proposition on the ballot. The proposition was whether or not the borough charter should be amended to change the current districts so that they meet state and federal standards for equal apportionment. The majority of voters approved the proposition with 715 checkmarks in the 'yes' box, compared to 302 'nay' votes.

Runoff elections likely for mayor of North Slope Borough

The North Slope Borough voted for a new mayor, in addition to assembly board and school board members, as well as 13 propositions. Mayor Edward Itta was the mayor of the huge borough on top of the world that encompasses 89,000 square miles and has a population of 9,430. Due to term limits Itta cannot run again and five candidates plus one write-in candidate vied for his position. As of press time, the results of the North Slope Borough election have not yet been canvassed.

According to the clerk's office, bags with ballots from all eight villages of the borough trickled in late. On Monday, election officials were still counting ballots and are working on 110 absentee and questioned ballots. Unofficial numbers put Charlotte Brower in the lead for mayor with 592 votes. George Ahmaogak had 540 votes. Ahmaogak's campaign was overshadowed by the indictment of his wife Maggie for embezzling money from the Eskimo Whaling Commission. A third candidate, Fenton Rexford from Kaktovik, managed to get 535 write-in votes out of 553 write-ins. Forrest Deano Olemaun received a distant 213 votes, Ned Arey Sr. got 103 votes and Charlie Hopson trails with 50 votes.

According to the borough clerk, canvassing takes place on Tuesday, October 11. The winner would have to have 40 percent of the votes. Since numbers suggest that a clear winner cannot be declared, the mayoral race will continue in a runoff election between the two candidates with the most votes. Runoff elections have to be held within three weeks of the certification of the election results.

The North Slope Borough encompasses the oil fields of Prudhoe Bay and the villages of Anaktuvuk Pass, Atgasuk, Barrow, Kaktovik, Nuiqsuit, Point Hope, Point Lay and Wainright.

In municipal elections in the city of Barrow, voters rejected a proposition of a city-run liquor store. Barrow is a damp community.

Four communities re-elect NSEDC representatives

Wales election botched, rescheduled for Nov. 1

By Laurie McNicholas

Five member villages of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. held community representative elections on Oct. 4. Incumbent board members reelected to three-year terms were Joel James, Gambell; Dean Peterson, Golovin; Elvina Naranjo, Koyuk; and Wilfred Katcheak, Stebbins.

Wales Mayor Frank Crisci said three persons contested the Wales election for an NSEDC board member following a second vote count that was inconsistent with the first count. Crisci provided The Nome Nugget with the following unofficial vote tally: Frank Oxereok, Jr., incumbent, 19; Lucy Kitchen, 18; and Sean Komonaseak, 11.

Crisci said other discrepancies were discovered after the election was contested. There were 48 signatures on the precinct register, but only 46 ballots, he noted. He pointed out that the two missing ballots could have determined the election winner.

Crisci said he discussed the discrepancies with Janis Ivanoff, NSEDC's president and chief executive officer, who agreed to do the election over again. NSEDC commented in an email to the Nugget:

"Following inconsistencies in its Oct. 4 vote tabulation that it could not reconcile, the City of Wales has determined that it is necessary to again hold the election for the community's representative to the [NSEDC] Board of Directors.

"NSEDC has concurred with the City of Wales' determination and, in accordance with NSEDC's bylaws, has scheduled a new election for the first Tuesday of November. The full slate of three candidates who were considered in the Oct. 4 election will again be on the ballot for the Nov. 1 vote. This election will proceed following NSEDC's bylaws for a normal election, which incorporate the community's municipal requirements to the extent that they do not conflict with NSEDC's election rules. NSEDC's bylaws require that a winner receive more than 40 percent of the votes cast. If no candidate can meet the more than 40 percent threshold, a run-off election will be scheduled between the two candidates receiving the highest number of votes. If a run-off election were necessary, it would be decided by a simple majority vote."

NSEDC Board tracks chum bycatch management efforts

Board will wait for new analysis before considering position significantly revised from its previ-

By Tyler Rhodes, Communications Director Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

When the North Pacific Fishery Management Council met in Nome this summer, the question of how to reduce the unintended catch of chum salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery was front and center on the agenda.

After receiving hours of testimony from residents of western Alaska, the council decided to not move forward with recommending new rules for the pollock fishery. Instead, the NPFMC opted to adjust the list of alternatives aimed at curbing bycatch and to call for a more detailed analysis of the issue. The new analysis is expected to be released in early March, a few weeks before the council is expected to again take up the issue at its meeting in Anchorage.

In light of the new alternatives and delayed schedule, the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation Board of Directors met Sept. 29 to examine and discuss the new options. After consideration, the majority of NSEDC's board members wished to hold off on taking a position on the issue until the new analysis is produced in March.

NSEDC and its board members take seriously the issue of salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery. Like the residents they represent, NSEDC board members are commercial and subsistence fishermen who are keenly aware of the value of healthy salmon returns to their communities. In their role as elected directors of NSEDC, board members are also charged with ensuring the organization is on stable footing.

As a member of the Community Development Quota program, NSEDC is allowed to harvest a small portion of the Bering Sea pollock fishery. It is revenue from this fishery that largely allows NSEDC to operate its programs that provide jobs, training, scholarships, fishery development and research, commercial fishing support and loans, and a wide range of investments in its 15 member communities.

Hard caps remain, with one difference

first, called a hard cap, has not been

Besides the status quo, the NPFMC is currently considering two alternatives for the pollock fleet. The ous format. Most options under this alternative would end the pollock fishery for the year once a certain, pre-determined number of chum salmon were caught as bycatch. There are six proposed caps that range from 50,000 to 353,000 chum. These proposed caps remain uncock changed from the previous set of alternatives.

What is different in the current

What is different in the current hard cap alternative is an added option to impose the caps only in June and July. This option aims to put more focus on conserving chum salmon bound for western Alaska. Genetic sampling has shown that in June and July chum bound for western Alaska are more prevalent in the bycatch than later in the season. In the August-October time period the percentage of Alaska-bound chum drops significantly with the majority of the bycatch impacting fish from Japanese hatcheries and Russia.

The June/July caps would be based on a percentage of the six proposed limits and, once hit, would shut down the pollock fishery until Aug. 1. For example, assuming a cap of 50,000 was selected and it were found 50 percent of chum bycatch historically occurred in June and July, the pollock fishery would have to stop until August 1 if 25,000 chum were taken before July 31.

Two options rolled into one

The second alternative before the NPFMC combines two programs that close off areas to pollock fishing in order to protect chum. These two programs are known as the Rolling Hot Spot system and Triggered Area Closures.

The Rolling Hot Spot system is already being used by much of the fleet on a voluntary basis. Participating vessels report their bycatch to a third-party contractor who will close certain fishing areas if the boats start reporting high bycatch. Closures can last a few days to a week. The system is designed to be responsive to bycatch as it is occurring.

The Triggered Area Closure aspect of this alternative would close off larger areas to the fleet for a longer duration of time. The closure areas are based on where bycatch has historically occurred at the greatest rates. The proposed "triggers" that would close these areas range from 25,000 to 200,000 chum.

The way these two closure systems would work together is once bycatch hits a pre-determined level-the first trigger — those who do not participate in the Rolling Hot Spot program would be kicked out of an expansive area for the rest of the season. Those in the Hot Spot program could still fish, but they face a second trigger that could force them from the most productive fishing grounds for some or all of the season.

Like with the hard caps, this second trigger also has options that would have them only apply in June and July in consideration of western Alaska chum.

What's next
The NPFMC is slated to again take up the issue of chum bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery at its March/April meeting in Anchorage. It is expected that a more detailed analysis of the new alternatives will be released a few weeks before the meeting is to take place.

If the NPFMC decides to move forward at that meeting, it will select a preferred alternative. The council may opt to combine aspects of the current alternatives when selecting their preference. Once a preferred alternative is selected, the issue will go before the council once more for final approval. The absolute earliest this could occur would be at the June NPFMC meeting in Kodiak.

A voluminous amount of information from the NPFMC on chum bycatch can be found at www.fakr.noaa.gov/npfmc/. Clicking on the link "Bycatch Controls" on the left side of the page will reveal the link to Bering Sea Chum Bycatch. On that page, the most recent documents are those which were prepared for the June NPFMC meeting in Nome.

Another resource on the site can be found by following the link titled "How do I navigate the NPFMC process?" On the linked page, a guide is available for download that details how to effectively submit testimony to the council, whether in person or in writing. The guide also contains addresses and other contact information for questions and comments.

Nome-Beltz students beat the competition in state-wide essay contest

After Ms. DeFilippo, junior high writing teacher at Nome-Beltz, initiated the participation of the school's English department in the state-wide Write Young Alaska contest "Zombies Invade Alaska," Nome-Beltz Jr./Sr. High School students dominated the competition. Six finalists in two age groups were chosen from over 100 entries state-wide. Nome-Beltz Jr. High student Kailey Witrosky made it to the last round in her age group. Junior Cecilia Wehde and seniors Daniel Anderson and Elizabeth Herzner made up the finalists in their age group.

After determination of the finalists by the organizers, it was up to public voting on WYAK's website: Kailey and Cecilia won in their respective groups. They will each receive an autographed copy of the novel Infection by Anchorage-based Sean Schubert.

The Dock Walk

Fall is in the air and while weather held up pretty nicely with no storms to speak of, offshore gold miners and fishermen are slowly pulling their boats out of the water and getting ready for winter. This week, harbormaster assistant Lucas Stotts takes us on the Dock Walk and reports what went on at Nome's port and small boat harbor.

On Monday, October 3, the Crowley tug Nachik and a fuel barge arrived, awaiting the arrival of the bigger fuel barge to lighter fuel to the Crowley tank farm. The bigger barge Kay's Point pulled by the tug Pacific Raven didn't arrive until Friday, anchored offshore and the Nachik lightered fuel to Crowley's tanks. The Raven and Kay's Point left on Friday to deliver more fuel to Kotzebue.

On Monday, the big gold dredges Casa DePaga and the Gold Dog were pulled out of the water and made ready for winter storage.

The Northland Services Polar Viking tug and the barge Hawaiian Trader arrived to drop off freight, took on backhaul cargo and headed back south on Wednesday.

On Tuesday, the STG crane

On Tuesday, the STG crane plucked the fishing-boat-turned-gold dredge Bad Chicken out of the water, also to be put away for the winter. On Wednesday, the Northland Services tug Lowell S. was lifted out of the water for repairs, to be put back into the water on Thursday. That day, the city's fresh water trailer that was used all summer to pump fresh water to boats, was cleaned out, winterized and stored away. On Friday, the Alaska Logistics tug Fish Hawk arrived with the Logistics Provider barge, coming all the way inside the small boat harbor. A crane loaded the boat Norton Bay on the barge. The Northland Services tug Lowell S. was pulled out of the water at the ramp and is stored high and dry for the winter.

On Saturday, the Fish Hawk with the Logistics Provider was still in the harbor. NSEDC's tender Enalik was loaded on the barge with a crane to be taken south to get serviced for the year. Also, the Canadian Coast Guard ship Sir Wilfred Laurier arrived in Nome, anchored offshore and did a crew change. On Sunday, the STG crane was loaded on the Logistics Provider barge and is heading southbound for a new job. On Tuesday morning, the Alaska Logistics Ocean Mariner tug with the 11-07 barge pulled into Nome and offloaded freight. With a storm in the forecast this week, barges are anxious to leave the area to sail ahead of the storm into calmer waters.

Nome begins wrestling season with home Invitational

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome-Beltz Junior-Senior High School wrestling team hosted its region invitational this past weekend. With their season beginning at home, the Nanooks and their fans were able to see a first glimpse of where some of their individuals stood when it came to regional competition. Teams from Kotzebue, Bethel, Galena and Unalakleet joined the Nanooks, and nearly every team had individual standouts over the weekend.

With dozens of athletes participating and hundreds of people cheering the teams over the weekend, the invitational at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks had an exciting and intense atmosphere. The junior and high school students went at it against each other individually for hours over the two day invitational and did whatever they needed to achieve. There were gauze balls up the athlete's noses and bandages on different body parts, but the heart of the wrestlers was more than enough to fight through the pain.

With multiple sessions over the two days, the athletes went through a bracket for their weight class to determine who would be the champion. There were 10 different weight classes for the high school and four more for the junior high. For the 106 weight class, the winner was Alex Gray of Nome. For the 113 class was Brettlyn Reich of Kotzebue. In the 120 weight class, the winner was Carlie McIntyre of Bethel and the winner in the 126 weight class was Emery Booshu of Nome. In the 132 weight class, the champion was Avery Coplin of Bethel and in the 138 weight, it was Scott Hansen of Kotzebue. Mario Kugo of Bethel won the 145 weight class and Gabe Simple of Galena won the 152 weight class. For the upper weight classes, the 160 weight class was won by Trevor Chavez of Bethel and in the 170-195 class, the winner was Luan Dema of Bethel.

Also notable in the junior high, the 97 pound weight class went to Leif Erikson of Nome and the 109 weight class went to Kaleb Korta of Galena. The 120-pound champion was Siku Johnson and in the 140 pound weight class, the winner was Nolan Horner of Nome.

The amount of matches involved with the different weight classes made the invitational not only exciting but also gave people great respect for all the athletes.

WHO IS WHO?— Twins Nolan and James Horner are duking it out in last weekend's tournament. Nolan Horner ended up winning first place, James Horner second place in the 140 lb Junior High class.

— Robert Pate of Nome, top, faces off against Kaleb Korta from Galena. Both Pate and Korta are Junior High wrestlers.

Nome Lady Nanooks excel in Galena tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

Last weekend the Nome-Beltz High School volleyball team continued its magnificent season as they won both matches against Galena. With the team heading to Galena, it was going to be a strong test for the Nanooks, but they were able to pre-

In the first match Friday, the Nanooks came out of the gates strong as they won the first two sets 25-8 and 25-6.

However, in the third set, the match became a more intense affair as the Nanooks were able to squeak out the set, winning 26-24 and also ending the match in straight sets. Knowing they had another match the next day against Galena, the straight set victory proved to be huge for the Nanooks due to the amount of rest they could get.

The Nanooks used the strength they had left in the tank to the fullest, winning the second match again in straight sets. However, this match wasn't quite as easy as the first.

The momentum that Galena seemed to gain by playing the third set tight in the first match carried over to the next match. Each set was close as the Nanooks won 25-19, 25-22, and 25-19. Nevertheless, the Nanooks were able to close out each set and hold on for the victory. Led by great middle blockers Devynn Johnson and Chloe Mattheis and hitter Taylor Pomeranz, the Lady Nanooks, who now move to 11-2, have lots of confidence heading into what will be a huge match this coming weekend.

The ladies will head to a tournament in Kotzebue where they will have a rematch against the Dillingham Lady Wolverines who gave the Nanooks their first loss of the season two weeks ago in Anchorage.

A healthy smile is a sign of a healthy heart

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Heart disease is a leading cause of death in both men and women worldwide. Most people are aware that simple lifestyle changes such as exercise, eating healthy foods, and quitting smoking will lower a person's risk for a heart attack or stroke. Research now shows that a toothbrush and floss may offer another powerful, accessible, inexpensive means of lowering the risk of cardiovascular disease.

Periodontitis (gum disease) is a chronic inflammatory disease of the gums caused by bacteria. These bacteria thrive on food particles, primarily sugar, left on the teeth for extended periods of time. Unless brushed or flossed away, food particles allow for an overgrowth of otherwise harmless bacteria and subsequent infection of the gum lining around the base of the teeth. Brushing teeth after meals, flossing daily to remove food debris, and regular dental checkups and cleanings is the best way to prevent gum disease.

Research shows that periodontitis left untreated can double a person's risk of developing cardiovascular diseases like heart attacks, strokes, and clotting in the arteries of the leg.

Researchers have not yet identified the exact link between gum disease and heart disease. Some scientists theorize that bacteria from untreated inflamed gum tissue enters the blood stream and becomes caught in cracks in the arteries of the heart and brain leading to the formation of plaques that block proper blood flow, like clogs in a pipe.

Other researchers believe that inflammation of the gums initiates a chain reaction causing inflammation and damage throughout the body, including the inner wall of blood vessels. Regardless of the cause, there is little doubt that a link exists between periodontal disease and cardiovascular disease.

So how can people lower their risk of both gum disease and heart disease? Lowering the risk of gum disease involves more than just practicing good oral hygiene. Several risk factors increase a person's risk of gum disease, even with regular tooth brushing and flossing. These include factors like smoking, diabetes mellitus, obesity, and emotional stress. Interestingly, these are the same risk factors that increase a person's risk of cardiovascular disease. Therefore most physicians and dentists now believe that treating either the heart or the teeth positively affects the other, but the best outcomes come from tending to both the teeth and the heart.

In 2009, the American Journal of Cardiology (for heart doctors) and the Journal of Periodontology (for dentists) published a consensus report suggesting that both physicians and dentists should look at the gums as a part of an overall cardiovascular risk assessment. The report recommends treating periodontal disease as a part of the broader treatment for cardiovascular disease, which includes smoking cessation, weight management, cholesterol control, and management of diabetes mellitus.

Dental care is good for your heart, especially when added to other healthy lifestyle changes. In some ways, the toothbrush and dental floss may be just as important as a treadmill or pair of walking shoes at preventing heart disease. But just like exercise equipment, a toothbrush and floss must be used to make a difference. With the "sweet-tooth" holidays of Halloween, Thanksgiving, and Christmas just around the corner, this may be a good time to get in a little heart-healthy dental care.

Computer virus hoax hits Alaska

BBB sees influx in "fix-it" scam reports

Anchorage, Alaska – Oct. 6, 2011 – Better Business Bureau warns Alaskans to be on alert for phony calls about viruses on their computers. Schemers impersonate "tech support" representatives at well-known computer companies—such as Microsoft—to feign stories about serious computer issues or viruses. To gain access to personal files, callers may convince consumers to click malicious links, visit phony websites or download programs that give them remote access to log in and "fix" computers.

week to 15 days in prison, starting November 1.

"This is the first one to go to jail over this," said District Attorney John Earthman, "and I'm sorry to say this, but he won't be the last one."

Earthman added that while there are a lot more similar cases on his desk, not all would end up putting a parent in jail. "We prosecute the worst of the worst cases, when everything else has failed," said Earthman. He said he prefers a less intrusive way, when parents and the school district can come up with a solution outside of court. But if nothing works, and the parents have laid out all their excuses, and nothing changes, then he will prosecute.

"I don't think it's out of line for parents who blow off their kids' education to go to jail," he said.

Earthman remembered a case a few years ago, when a child was actually removed from her home because her parents didn't send her to school. The child was taken into Office of Child Services' custody and placed in a home in a different village, where she then attended school.

Bering Strait School District Superintendent Rob Picou gave a statement to The Nome Nugget, saying, "We are obviously saddened when any of our parents go to jail for any reason, however, we are equally saddened when kids don't come to school often enough to learn what they will need in order to be successful later and then graduate from high school."

Picou said that BSSD is working with the parents from the first sign of trouble. "We notify parents every step of the way," he wrote in an email correspondence with The Nome Nugget. The school calls after every unexcused absence and after five unexcused absences, they receive a letter in the mail, encouraging better attendance and also warning them of possible legal action. At that point parents can be cited and fined, if found guilty. After ten unexcused absences and after school officials feel they have done everything they could to convince parents to improve their kids' attendance record, the district contacts the

"We make every effort to remedy the situation before turning it over to the District Attorney. It is only the most extreme cases that are turned over to the legal system," Picou wrote.

Nome DA Earthman said that there are more cases pending and that the DA's office in Nome has worked for years on a system on how to go about prosecuting truancy cases. "These cases are competing with about 800 to 900 criminal cases a year, cases that involve violent crimes like assault, domestic violence, homicide," Earthman said. With resources stretched thin, truancy cases don't often rise to the top of the pile. However, Earthman added that Kotzebue now has two new district attorneys, who are also positioned to take on truancy cases in their area.

All villages in the BSSD have parent liaison officers who call parents when kids are not showing up at school. The Anthony Andrews School in St. Michael has a paid truancy enforcement officer, said Carl White, special assistant to the BSSD superintendent's special projects.

White is helping principals in the BSSD to enforce the state's truancy law. He reviews the documentation in truancy cases and submits the paperwork to the DA. White also stressed that it is the parents' responsibility to get their kids to school and make sure they are well rested and, if problems arise, to take advantage of free tutoring. "For students to be successful, they need parents and teachers to work together," White said.

Begich Introduces Coast Guard Reauthorization Act Addresses nation's Icebreaker shortage, other Alaska needs

Giving the United States Coast Guard the necessary tools and resources to carry out its statutory missions, U.S. Sen. Mark Begich, chair of the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee Subcommittee on Oceans, Atmosphere, Fisheries, and Coast Guard, introduced the Coast Guard Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2012 and 2013. Begich was joined by Commerce Committee Chairman John D. Rockefeller IV (D-WV) and Oceans subcommittee Ranking Member Olympia Snowe (R-ME) as co-sponsors of the legislation.

"The men and women of the Coast Guard put their lives on the line every day to save those at risk on the sea, enforce the laws governing our fisheries and maritime safety, and guard our national security," Begich said. "I am honored to serve as Chairman of the subcommittee that authorizes this essential armed service. Last year, Congress passed into law the first Coast Guard authorization act in many years. With this new authorization bill, we renew our nation's commitment to the Coast Guard and make sure they have the cutters, aircraft, small boats, shore facilities and statutory authorities to perform their varied and necessary missions."

"As one of our nation's primary first responders, the Coast Guard is vital to our national security, economic security, public safety, and environment," said Chairman Rockefeller. "We depend on the Coast Guard to keep us safe and secure, but their ability to do that rests on their access to resources and other support necessary to carry out their missions. This authorization bill will give the Coast Guard the crucial support it needs to execute their duties successfully."

"The Coast Guard Reauthorization Act of 2010 was a long overdue assurance that the Coast Guard will have the authorities and authorizations necessary to support the service's critical and diverse missions. This bill builds on the reform efforts of the recent reauthorization, and in particular, will provide the Coast Guard with the capability necessary to efficiently and cost-effectively rebuild its aging fleet," said Ranking Member Snowe.

The legislation authorizes the U.S. Coast Guard's funding levels at $8.7 billion including operations; acquisition and maintenance of vessels, aircraft and facilities; research, the reserve program and retired pay, and other statutory missions. The bill sets the active duty personnel levels for the service at 47,000 and makes a number of improvements, clarifications and refinements to the Coast Guard's statutory authorities.

Other components of the bill include: Making the Coast Guard the sole provider of polar icebreaking services to agencies of the federal government, and require the Secretary of Homeland Security to ensure that the Coast Guard continues to operate a minimum of two heavy polar icebreakers as a part of its fleet; Authorizing the Coast Guard advance procurement funding authority for the purchase of new ship construction materials, parts, and components that have a long "lead time" to make sure the Coast Guard is able to replace its timeworn fleet at the best possible savings to the taxpayers;

Requiring the Coast Guard to study the feasibility and potential of establishing a deep water sea port in the Arctic to protect and advance United States interests within the Arctic region; Requiring the Coast Guard to consult with other federal, state and local entities in the determination of what improvements are necessary to make the harbor at St. George, Alaska a fully functional harbor throughout the year; Authorizing the Coast Guard to construct or lease a hangar, berthing, and messing facility in the Aleutian Island operating area to support Coast Guard operations in remote areas. The bill would also transfer the decommissioned cutter STORIS to a Juneau group for use as a museum honoring the Coast Guard's role in Alaska history; adjusts funding levels for the Cordovabased Oil Spill Recovery Institute for inflation, and other provisions.

Abraham Lincoln Oksoktaruk

Abraham Lincoln Oksoktaruk, Da-da, was born to Isaiah and Margaret on October 10, 1954. He was born on his Dad's 32nd birthday and was the fifth child of nine siblings. He died on September 27, 2011 in Anchorage.

Abraham attended elementary school in White Mountain to the eighth grade, and then entered the boarding school program in Anchor-Abraham graduated from Chugiak High School in 1973. While in high school his family began to see a change in his behavior. After he graduated he came home. Unfortunately, while in the midst of his illness, in August of 1977, he killed his three-year old nephew, Michael James. He was then sent to a mental institution in Atascadero, California. He stayed there for approximately four years and then was transferred to A.P.I. in Anchorage in 1981. He stayed there for 20 years. Prior to his death he resided in an assisted living home in Anchorage.

While he was at A.P.I. he was able to work part-time as custodian at Fort Richardson. Throughout his life he enjoyed fishing, learning the computer, shopping and eating at the mall, and most of all getting gifts for his friends.

Da-da had many friends and caregivers over the years. A recent caregiver named Rory said, "Abraham is much loved." A doctor at their home would tell him "that one day he would take Da-da to the Philippines to visit his village." A last wish, unfulfilled, was to go salmon fishing again.

Even if we missed many birthdays and holidays with Da-da, he was remembered during those days. Da-da was ignored by most of the family, but Do-do and Lena were able to visit him in October 2004 and recently from September 10-16, 2011. The last coherent conversation with him was on September 21, before his illness took its toll on his body.

Abraham was preceded in death by his parents Isaiah and Margaret; brothers Ernie, Koogie, Frankie, and (Ralph) Bruce; sisters Pearl and JoAnn; sister-in-law Ann; and nephews Patrick and Michael James. He is survived by his sisters Do-do and Lena Pauline; nephews Bob, Curtis, and Marty Williams, Jacob and Arnold Oksoktaruk, and Craig David Wood; nieces Patti Lillie, Terri Lincoln, Jessie Marie Phillips, and Tiffany Lincoln, and numerous aunts, uncles, and cousins.

We will always remember you, Abraham. We love you and will keep you in our hearts.

What's the buzz about Medicare changing??

HERE'S THE FACTS FOR PEOPLE ON MEDICARE:

If you have a Medicare Prescription Drug Plan (Part D) you have an EARLIER period of time in which to review your current prescription insurance coverage, compare what else is available and enroll in a different plan for 2012. You have from October 15th through December 7th to make that change. Be on the lookout for your written "annual notice of change" letter in the US mail. It will tell you what the changes will be in pricing, drug coverage, co-payments and/or deductibles in 2012. If everything looks fine, you can leave the plan as is. If you want to compare what you have with other options and you use a computer or have a caregiver or family member to help, go to medicare.gov, chose "compare drug and health plans," enter your zipcode, medications and see what other plans are available. You can enroll in a new plan online or call the company's tollfree number and speak to an agent who will take your request by phone. There are many tribal facilities, clinics, senior centers, agencies serving seniors and people with disabilities that have Certified Medicare counselors. Acting on this quickly may save you a lot of money and frustration at the pharmacy in 2012.

If you need help with the Medicare options, get out your red, white and blue Medicare card and your prescription information and call Alaska's Medicare Information Office at 800-478-6065 or (907) 269-3680. If Jeanné or Judith don't answer your call on the spot, please leave them your name and phone number and zipcode. Protect your identity by NOT leaving us your Medicare number. If you have a limited income and limited resources please mention that, as well, so the counselor can see if you might qualify for the federal "extra help" program and submit the application online.

point in life when every human being needs to grow up and I'm one of them—which I am certain of!

I've gained so much knowledge while incarcerated but cannot pass it along to those that truly want or need it because in here there aren't too many that care to learn and grow; I cannot reach out to those out there because I'm here.

Some of you may be naysayers or non-believers about what I've written here based on preconceptions that you may have about me-and actions do speak louder than words!

I do have merely five months until my release and I'd love to convert those non-believers into believers that I am truly a changed man.

Remember that practicing making good, just decisions and turning it into habit can change the course of your life and bring to you happiness among other emotions along with value. It's up to you to decide to do right or wrong; good or bad, having freedom or being incarcerated. You have the power within you to enhance people's lives and to contribute to them something that can have a major impact or vice versa.

That choice is yours, hopefully you make a good decision. Respectfully,

Editor Nome Nugget,

There was an interesting contrast in the stories on chum salmon bycatch in the pollock trawl fisheries on pages 8 and 9 in the October 6, 2011 Nome Nugget.

On the left is a story written by Nugget reporter Laurie McNicholas that is filled with facts and statistics showing that the pollock trawlers are slamming the salmon again this year as bycatch while they strain the water for the pollock which have been ominously hard to find.

On the right is a public relations fluff piece by NSEDC Communications Director, Tyler Rhodes that at first glance looks like a news story but on closer inspection turns out to be devoid of facts but contains nothing but feel-good pabulum.

Laurie's story, like all of her stories, is meticulously researched and shows that what the trawl industry and the managers told us when the North Pacific Fishery Management Council met in Nome in June is a bunch of wishful thinking; they don't have an effective means to avoid salmon bycatch. Nothing they have tried this year has worked.

Tyler tries to convince us without anything to back it up that NSEDC's trawlers are not the dirtiest in the Bering Sea and they are trying real hard to avoid killing and wasting our salmon as bycatch. Claiming to not be the dirtiest trawlers among the shore-based trawler fleet which is responsible for 80-90 percent of the salmon bycatch is like bragging about being the guy in the leper colony who still has the most fingers. In fact, it turns out that may not even be true; NSEDC's trawlers made it on the list of the dirtiest 20 pollock fishing vessels according to the story on page 8.

I attended the meeting where the NSEDC board was sold the proposal to buy into the shore-based pollock trawlers that deliver to processing plants in Dutch Harbor. I thought I had seen everything during the past 20 years but this one took the cake. What could they possibly have been thinking - buying into this filthy industry?

Norton Sound has experienced the most severe declines in salmon stocks and salmon fishing opportunity in Alaska. Bycatch in the industrialized pollock trawl fisheries is a major factor in those declines. We should be lobbying for shutting down the shore-based fishery, not providing political support for its continuation.

Already this year, the pollock trawlers have killed and wasted more salmon than all of the commercial fishermen in Norton Sound caught and the pollock trawlers are still fishing in an effort to harvest the pollock

I'm embarrassed to be a co-owner of the dirtiest sector of the trawl fishery, an industry that is known for its destructiveness. I would suggest that we look for some gullible chumps to sell our trawlers to but I seriously doubt that we could find anyone that stupid.

Dear all who voted for me!

Thank you very much for supporting me in my running to be a city council member. Although I predicted the result, as I had a very experienced opponent who has participated in elections many times, Î am very appreciative of everyone who voted for me. In general, I am proud of the result I had as I am a first time runner and new citizen, just recently receiving my voting rights.

I would like to wish Mary the best of luck in serving the community again!

I will continue to find a way to serve the community without being a city council member, because I like Nome and understand what is needed.

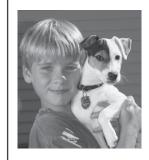

Also, I would like to concentrate on creating a mining museum and will continue to support museum committee members, especially Mr. Handeland. We both were and still are working for AGC and have many ideas on how to preserve the history of AGC and what has been collected for over 100 years. I'll also be involved in the Sea Port expansion, Snake River Bridge and many other projects if I continue to hold my position as Land Manager with AGC/NomeGold.

I will continue to be independent and bring concerns to city council meetings and local press. I will also hold ties between specific groups and local officials

Again thank you very much to you all and good luck with everything! Nikolai Ivanoff, Nome, AK

Failed Rock Creek gold mine closes

NovaGold Resources Inc. announces closure in financial report

By Diana Haecker

After months of rumors on the street, it is now official: the idle Rock Creek gold mine is heading for permanent closure.

The Canadian company NovaGold Resources, Inc. that built the mine six miles north of Nome has announced in the third quarter financial report that "the decision was made during the third quarter to proceed with mine closure for the project." The report further says that the company works closely with the State regulatory authorities and the local community on obtaining agreement for an approved closure

Instead of the expected $20.6 million, closure costs are now estimated to be $27.9 million.

Jack diMarchi, large mine coordinator with the Department of Natural Resources said that the company last week handed in the last documents for a complete closure plan, which is now up for review by DNR and the Department of Environmental Conservation. DiMarchi said that the extensive review would take a couple of months. "At this point we have all that we need for a review, but the review may result in changes and a second version of a closure plan," diMarchi said. The closure plan that was part of the multi-volume thick planning documents submitted for permitting to build the mine, is obsolete because it was based on the assumption that the Ron Rimelman, Colorado-based environmental manager with NovaGold Resources, said that the company filed a closure plan that would not require extensive water treatment in the future. He said the plan involves grading and re-vegetating the land close to its original state. "The Tucked at the tail end of a discussion on a Board of Game proposal to change the rules on musk ox hunting, the Northern Norton Sound Advisory committee to the Board of Game discussed ways to deal with nuisance musk oxen in the Nome area. As it turned out, Nome residents are not alone in the unusual situation. Residents in Deering and Shishmaref also report being harassed by musk oxen.

Tony Gorn, game biologist with ADF&G laid out the facts. "There are very high numbers of musk oxen concentrating close to Nome and it causes us to reset how we think about them," Gorn said. As a game biologist, he presented the rationale for a musk ox to be here.

"If we moved the animals, that would be a band aid solution," Gorn said. "They are here for a reason." Nome proper makes good musk ox country, as there are almost no predators in town – except for the dogs that musk oxen seem to loathe. Snow melts earlier in the spring and browse is abundant. And then there are all these buildings that musk ox like to hide behind. Those make life good in the city limits. But then there are also dogs that have been attacked in the past and people wonder when a person will be the subject of an at-

Watch for a new state building on Front Street

The Nome Common Council met in work session Wednesday noon, Oct. 12 at City Hall where an entourage comprising Sitnasuak Native Corp. executives and a developer who is a member of the Alaska Municipal Bond Bank board greeted council members with a rough proposal to set up Sitnasuak as the builder of a new state building through a government to government procurement or government to private procurement situation.

Last summer City of Nome rejected a state Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities plan to have the state facility built at the end of Steadman Street on land available from Alaska Gold Co., saying that the building should stay on Front Street.

Then Sitnasuak and the City of Nome attempted to enter into a binding agreement with State of Alaska Dept. of Administration to design, bid, build and then lease with an option to purchase a new state office building on Sitnasuak's large lot on Front Street plus two lots adjacent to be purchased from Jim West, Jr and the Mark Sackett family. Under last year's plan, the City would have contracted the construction and management of the building to Nanuq, LLC, a subsidiary of Sitnasuak. Nanuq, the script read, would pull together financing, design and construction. Up front capital costs would not fall on the shoulders of state or local residents. A completed building did not stem from that plot. Now, a plot revision may see the project through.

Last week, Sitnasuak had its ducks lined up, according to the corporation president, Charles Fagerstrom.

"We've been working hard to present our side of the story on a state building in Nome on the parking lot on Front Street," Fagerstrom told the Council. "David Hoffman, our CEO, has formulated a team of experts. In the past, we may have been described as somewhat flaky organization in professional experience," Fagerstrom quipped, but the organization was there Wednesday with experts, he added. "We come to you with open ears to hear your side of the story."

Fagerstrom presented to the Council Mark E. Pfeffer, architect, one of five commissioners on the Municipal Bond Bank, and Hoffman, Sitnasuak's CEO. Also sitting in on the combo was Eldon Mulder, former state representative and co-chair of the House Finance Committee, now working as a lobbyist. Pfeffer was first appointed to the Alaska Municipal Bond Bank board in 2001 and reappointed in 2009 for a term ending in 2013. The Alaska Municipal Bond Bank Authority helps communities with financing for capital projects. It provides direct loans with no set loan limits. Pfeffer had the expertise in putting together such financial partnerships and would talk to the Municipal Bond Bank if the City desired to finance the building, a good idea, he said, because the City would get a better interest rate. If a legislative appropriation needed to be involved, that had to be in before mid-December to be considhas a big piece of Nanuq Development—49 percent to Sitnasuak's 51 percent, according to Hoffman, who said he had board approval to continue pursuit of the project.

However, Pfeffer Development

"We're ready to roll," Hoffman said. If the City still wanted Sitnasuak to take on risk of the building, to work with financing, develop the lease work, say the word, Hoffman told council members. "Our primary issue is what do you want to do-the same [as in the July 15, 2010 letter of interest to the state]?

At first, Council members said they did not have enough information to form a decision on the spot too many unknowns - and could not vote anyway in a work session. One thing was sure-the City did not want to own or maintain the building, and did not want to have the land come off the tax rolls. The size now is up for grabs and needs more

Dear Nancy,

I don't know how to write very well but I'll do my best to be understood on the issue of fluoridation in our city water.

How many parts per million of fluorite does it take for our water become poisonous for human consumption?

In today's world are we not ingesting countless toxins in our bodies through foods we eat and polluted air we breath to add one more toxin as fluoride?

Where fluoride is added to our drinking water for the sake of preventive tooth decay, it seem like we are not teaching enough of the underlying causes of deterioration of

Dear Editor:

On page 6 of the October 13, 2011 Nome Nugget, NSEDC Communications Director Tyler Rhodes published a story attempting to explain why NSEDC refuses to communicate with us about chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands pollock trawl fisheries. The reason he provided is not very convincing. He says they need to see the new analysis from the North Pacific Fishery Management Council that will come out shortly before the council chooses its preferred alternative for limiting chum salmon by-

In June, the council staff was sent back to do additional analysis in the economic and social impacts on western Alaska communities caused by the killing and wasting of millions of chum salmon as bycatch in the industrialized pollock trawl fisheries. I would think that the NSEDC board would be experts on those impacts since they live in some of the worst impacted communities in Alaska and would not need economists and anthropologists from outside to tell them what it has meant to the lives of their neighbors. To me it looks like nothing more than an excuse for stalling.

Occupied

It's like a pandemic. The global sit-ins are protesting a lot of things. They are a popular movement that has caught on just about everywhere... across Europe— London, Paris, and Rome; in the U.S. from Wall Street in New York, to Chicago, Denver, San Francisco, Seattle and even little ol' Anchorage and Fairbanks. It's even in Hong Kong. Like Topsy, it just "growed."

What seems to be at the heart of this movement is that folks are tired of the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer. The disappearance of the middle class is a global phenomenon. It seem the Occupy Wall Street effect that annoys folks the most is that after we bailed out the financial institutions their CEOs helped themselves to obscene bonuses and paychecks, while they were busy foreclosing on mortgages. The banking institutions are not the only targets. Those sacred cow non-profit corporations such as insurance companies, pharmaceuticals, and even educational institutions and governmental entities have been too good to their chiefs at the expense of their Indians. Nome is not immune to this.

The Wall Street protesters seem to be made up of individuals who, among other things, are trying to combat corporate greed. Perhaps they are a product of public resentment of the self-serving sycophants in Congress. Maybe they are a reaction to the Tea Party rigidity. Who knows? But these folks are a global force to be reckoned with. Don't underestimate their resolve, whatever it turns out to be. —N.L.M.—

Nome airport is home of Alaska Airlines' pilot wind and solar project

It's not a symbolic prop that is spinning at the Nome Alaska Airlines terminal but a real wind turbine producing power for the airline's building at the Nome airport. The six-kilowatt wind turbine, built in Scotland and outfitted to withstand the arctic weather, was commissioned on Oct. 4. The wind power works in addition to an array of solar panels that have been producing power since early September.

Project manager Kyle Smith said that this is Alaska Airlines' first renewable energy project. "This is a demonstration project for Alaska Airlines to gauge if the wind and solar energy applications can successfully help to power their facilities and reduce carbon emissions," said Smith. He said that Nome was selected over other Alaska Airlines locations due to the experience Nome Joint Utilities and the City of Nome have with wind turbines, the favorable wind and solar resources, Bering Straits Development Corp.'s experience with installing solar panels and the high electrical load of the Nome terminal.

The turbine's generating capacity is six kW and the solar is a little over one kW. "We project the new renewable energy systems should generate about 15,000 kilowatt-hours per year," said Smith. "This will power about six percent of the building's 240,000 kW load." The renewable energy generation is projected to save the airline $5,000 in their annual Nome utility bill. The systems are not going be able to generate enough power to feed back to the NJUS grid.

Smith said that with a bigger turbine, back feeding would have been a possibility, but the designers were limited in what could be installed with the available space on Alaska Airlines' lot and FAA height restrictions.

Smith said that the project was completed with an all-Alaskan workforce. Smith is with the Anchorage company Heritage Renewables and functioned as the project manager. Alasco was the general contractor and Bering Straits Development Corp. installed the solar and was the electrical contractor. Alaska Wind Industries from Nikiski installed the wind turbine.

The project takes advantage of the federal Renewable Energy grant which sunsets by the end of this year. The grant reimburses 30 percent of the project's cost.

Port parking lawsuit settled

By Sandra L. Medearis

Larry's Auto Repair and City of Nome have come to an agreement that resulted in dismissal of a yearlong suit and countersuit, with prejudice, over the $6,000 to $7,000 the City wanted the business to pay for customers parking on Port of Nome property.

In dismissal with prejudice, the plaintiff is barred from bringing an action on the same claim.

The port property in question is covered by port tariffs for user storage fees. Larry's Auto sits across the street at the corner of Belmont Street and Seppala Drive. Third parties have been dropping off their cars on port property to wait repair by the shop.

The amount of the settlement was yet to be confirmed, but the Nugget has been told by sources close to the action that Larry and Kay Carter, owners of Larry's Auto, would pay a third of the bill. The Nugget has asked the City of Nome for terms of the settlement and the cost of legal services for the collection effort.

The settlement, filed Oct. 6, cleared an anticipated week's trial set to begin Oct. 10 off the court calendar. According to court documents, each side will pay its own legal costs.

In June, Magistrate Bradley Gater recused himself as judge and the case went to Judge Paul Roetman of Kotzebue after Gater's name and those of Judge Ben Esch, Josie Bahnke, city manager, Larry and Kay Carter, owners of Larry's Auto Repair, Joy Baker, harbormaster, Conner Thomas and Bob Lewis, both attorneys, John Earth-man, district attorney, Marsha Tobuk, Dennis Bahnke, Diana Adams, Loretta Bullard and Jason M. (or Sonny) Song, taxi driver appeared on a preliminary witness list. A final list submitted Aug. 29 by Ted Stepovich, attorney representing the Carters, included those names and about 20 others, most of whom had parked their cars on port property pending repairs.

The Carters have maintained they do not owe the money, that they had no lease on the property after 2005, and that the City did nothing to diminish its injury: The City did not post the lot against parking and did not seek relief from third parties who parked on the property.

The City bases it claim on periodic statements sent the Carters asking for fees consistent with the Port of Nome tariff.

"Larry's Auto needs business write-offs," Kay Carter said last week. This will be one of them."

Police have suspect in truck fire case

By Diana Haecker

Without getting into specifics, Nome Police Chief John Papasodora said that the Nome Police Department has developed a suspect in the investigation of the suspected arson in the recent truck fires. On Monday, Oct. 10 an abandoned truck parked behind an old warehouse on River Street was on fire, completely burning the truck and damaging a container van and parts of the building. Shortly after Nome volunteer firefighters got the fire under control, dispatch received a call about a second truck that appeared to burn. A red Ford truck, parked at the Sitnasuak parking lot, was outfitted with an incendiary device but firefighters responded in time to prevent a fire from breaking out and spreading to nearby parked cars.

Matt Owens wants retrial

By Diana Haecker

Matthew Owens, who was convicted of the murder of Sonya Ivanoff in 2003, filed a petition last week in Nome Superior Court to grant him a new trial. Owens argues that he had ineffective counsel representing him and that therefore he should be granted a new trial.

Owens, a former Nome police officer, stood trial for murdering 19year-old Sonya Ivanoff and tampering with evidence to cover up the crime. The trial in Nome ended with a hung jury. Owens was represented by James McComas, a wellknown Anchorage defense lawyer. A second trial took place later that year in Kotzebue. Owens was represented by appointed Office of Public Advocacy attorney Steven Wells with Mc-Comas as co-counsel. The jury in Kotzebue found Owens guilty of both charges and Nome Judge Ben Esch of the Alaska Superior Court sentenced Owens in April 2006 to 101 years in prison.

Owens appealed to the Court of Appeals on grounds for improper venue and insufficient evidence, but was denied. He then filed a petition for hearing on the same issues to the Alaska Supreme Court and was also denied in September 2010.

DUI charge may cancel probation

By Sandra L. Medearis

Frank R. Johnson under court-set requirements for probation related to a conviction on manslaughter stemming from the death of his infant daughter in 2003, has put himself at risk of having probation revoked.

Based on a document filed by Nome Police Officer Nick Harvey, Johnson, 32, was charged Oct. 10 on driving under the influence of alcohol on Oct. 10. As a result, Johnson is facing not only a DUI charge, but also a petition filed to cancel probation. Following a lengthy chain of court appearances and appeals to higher courts, Johnson pleaded guilty to a charge of manslaughter in the starving death of the infant. In June last year, Johnson received a sentence of time served plus probation for the remainder. The baby's mother is serving a sentence of 20 years in the death following a lack of nutrition and assault on the child.

According to officers, they observed Johnson in a white pickup truck turn south on Carsten Way into the northbound lane, stop at Carsten Way and Front Street, turn east and accelerate at a high rate of speed, traveling 40 miles per hour in a 25 mph zone.

Harvey described Johnson as having a strong odor of alcohol on his breath, watery red eyes and a swayed balance upon exiting his vehicle. According to court documents, breath tests showed Johnson above the legal limit for alcohol.

Johnson is out on bail and instructed to follow probation requirements to have no possession or consumption of alcohol.

According to court documents, Johnson said he had had a "long stressful week" and "I knew I shouldn't have been doing this.

A trial is scheduled in December.

structures and facilities will be removed and the land restored as much as we can," said Rimelman. The mine complex sits partially on land leased from the Bering Straits Native Corporation and the Sitnasuak Native Corporation.

Rimelman said that both Native corporations had a chance to look at the plan and comment on it.

DiMarchi said that the tailings dam would be breached, the north rim of the tailings dam would be removed and the toe of the dam would be re-contoured to blend in with the surrounding topography.

NovaGold officials, responding through a spokesperson via email, said that they would stay open for a potential last minute buyer. "Until the plan is finalized and approved by the State and the landowners and executed, alternative options, including the potential sale of the assets, remain possible," NovaGold responded. Asked why and when the decision to close the mine was made, they said, "a year ago NovaGold began soliciting offers to sell the Rock Creek project to provide information to the Board of Directors on whether sale of the property was a viable option. At the same time, the Company began preparing a preliminary closure plan. Unable to identify a buyer with the operations expertise, funding and the level of commitment to environmental responsibility needed to advance the project, the Company continues to move forward with its closure

When NovaGold started to drum up support for building the mine in 2005 and 2006, arguments for the mine development included that the mine would create jobs for a 25-year mine life, during which the company hoped to extract 100,000 ounces of gold out of Rock Creek. Documents filed for permitting characterized the Nome region as "benighted." Jobs, cheap power as the mine was to consume as much electricity from NJUS as the city of Nome, and a general effect of money being spent in the community were selling points to support the mine.

Rick van Nieuwenhyse, CEO of NovaGold, said repeatedly that Rock Creek is meant to be a showcase mine that would facilitate the transition of NovaGold from exploration to a gold production company. However, the company changed their priorities and with that, Rock Creek fell from grace. Asked when and why the change came about, company officials wrote, "Following an assessment in 2010 of development options at Rock Creek and a strategic change in corporate goals, NovaGold made the decision to solicit offers for the project."

The company has shifted their attention to the larger Donlin Gold project in the Kuskokwim region, the Galore project in British Columbia and the Ambler project in the NANA region.

Construction at Rock Creek commenced in the summer of 2006 and continued through 2007 and 2008 with start-up activities beginning in

Voters say no to Pebble

Voters in the Lake and Peninsula borough voted no to the Pebble Mine. Unofficial results were released late Monday night that indicate that a ballot initiative during the municipal elections passed by a vote of 280 supporting the "Save our Salmon" initiative to 246 who don't. The "Save our Salmon" initiative would prohibit projects that would disrupt salmon spawning grounds. The ballot initiative was funded by Pebble foe Bob Gillam, who maintains that constructing the world's largest open pit mine in the headwaters of the spawning grounds of the largest red

September 2008. The company cites mechanical and electrical start up issues coupled with the global financial crisis in 2008 as the reasons that put the mine in care and maintenance status ever since. During the mine construction, two steel workers were killed when they fell from a manlift when working on the mill building's roof. Several environmental permit violations and problems dealing with the vast amounts of water also added to the mine's difficulties.

Bering Straits Native Corporation's president and CEO Gail Schubert confirmed in an earlier interview conducted this summer that BSNC was consulted and did weigh in the closure plans. "We wanted to ensure that there were technical provisions put in that would protect us as land owners and ensure that when NovaGold leaves the area that it is in a state that we are assured that all measures have been taken to bring the site back to the condition or as near as the condition as when it was first leased out to NovaGold," Schubert said.

Asked how BSNC leadership felt about the mine closure since the project started with high hopes for jobs and other promises made, Schubert said they are not pleased with the outcome. "Honestly, it is a disappointment," Schubert said. "It was presented at the time as an incredible economic opportunity for this region. It's not often that something that significant comes into the region and creates the kinds of jobs that it was supposed to create. A lot of the jobs were fairly well paying jobs. So much so that a number of villagers were able to move into the Nome area or were able to commute back and forth between Nome and the village they were from to work at those jobs. So it was a huge disappointment to us when NovaGold decided to shutter the mine. But that was a decision that they and their board made and so now what we're basically doing is ensuring that we as land owners are protected.'

Asked if there were discussions at BSNC whether or not to buy the mine, Schubert said that there were discussions with consultants and experts, but ultimately the corporation decided that there are too many risks involved with running a mine. "It's not inexpensive to operate a mine and the conditions up here are quite different from what NovaGold expected. There is a huge risk tied into it," Schubert said.

Once the closure plans are reviewed and approved, NovaGold plans to hold a community meeting in Nome. Jack diMarchi with the state said that DNR would also participate but that the company has to take the lead in organizing the meeting

NovaGold officials said in the email correspondence with the Nugget that NovaGold remains committed to their employees, the people of Nome and the surrounding lands and fully intends to implement and conduct the closure plan and land reclamation activities in a professional, courteous and responsible manner.

2011-12 Snow Removal

Listed below are the prioritized actions that the City of Nome will undertake during the 2011-2012 snow season. These actions are meant as a guide and DO NOT commit the City to any course of action other than that which is deemed to be in the best interests of safety and City resources.

- During major blizzards and ground storms, City crews will stand by and only attempt to open streets as required in emergency situations.
- II. Once the storm has abated, every effort will be made to open fire lanes (one lane) on every street in town.
- III. Once fire lanes have been established, crews will begin to open major (school bus) routes to two lanes of traffic. Streets identified as priority are * East and West 5th Ave. * East 1st Ave. * West 2nd Ave. * West E Street * East K Street * Icy View Loop * East N Street * Steadman Street.
- IV. Once major routes have been opened to two lanes of traffic, crews will begin opening the remaining streets to two lanes of traffic.
- Once the streets have been opened to two lanes of traffic, crews will systematically begin to widen, clean and haul snow to designated snow storage sites. Service areas will be rotated in order that all areas of town receive equal treatment during this clean up.
- VI. Sanding of select streets will be performed by ADOT. Other streets will be sanded when conditions warrant and resources allow.
- VII. The major snow storage for the City of Nome will be: The snow storage site located off the By-pass road.

Once again these plans are meant as a guide. We will take actions contrary to this plan as necessary. We urge citizens of Nome to help us keep the streets safe and usable.

Some things that will help our efforts are:

- · Cars should be parked off the rights-of-way as much as possible during the clearing and removal of snow;
- Obstructions (buildings, dog houses, snow machines, 4-wheelers, trash boxes, etc..) that prevent removal of snow should be moved farther on to private property if at all possible;
- Be alert to the area of town in which we are working and, if at all possible, keep parked cars and traffic to a minimum in these areas.
- Pushing of snow into the public right-of-way after a street has been cleared is discouraged.

After hours, on the weekends and holidays, City crews will be on-call as needed. Due to the limited resources within the City, local contractors will be utilized to provide additional manpower and equipment as necessary. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact Public Works Dept. at 443-5653. Thank you!

Advisory committee rejects BoG proposal to modify muskox hunt

By Diana Haecker

The Northern Norton Sound Advisory committee met last week for two days to discuss proposals that will go before the Board of Game at their next meeting in Barrow from November 11 through 14.

The 15-member advisory committee representing Nome, Shishmaref, Teller, Brevig Mission, White Mountain, Golovin, Elim and Wales spent almost one entire day talking about a proposal that would effectively create a trophy musk ox hunt and a subsistence musk ox hunt.

The proposal was submitted by the Board of Game and seeks a review of the discretionary authority of the Department of Fish and Game to cut the animal's horns and thereby destroy the trophy value of an animal taken with a subsistence permit. The pre-amble of the proposal says that changes in musk ox trophy destruction include the options of no horncutting in subsistence hunts and changes to the subsistence hunt bag limit to exclude mature bulls. Alaska Department of Fish and Game Area Biologist Tony Gorn advised the committee to not adopt the proposal.

Gorn walked the committee and the public through the reasons why he thinks the proposal should not be adopted. For one, there are only so many musk oxen on the Seward Peninsula and the numbers are not getting any better. "I want to talk about harvestable surplus, and you guys can talk about who gets to kill them," Gorn said, making clear that he doesn't want to get caught in the middle.

Currently, the musk ox are hunted in units 22 and 23 southwest in a Tier I hunt. In the last three years, the hunts were in a Tier I status, meaning that enough harvestable surplus animals were available to be hunted for subsistence and a small number even for trophy hunters.

Last year, the musk ox population on the Seward Peninsula had a harvestable surplus of 177 animals, according to Gorn. This allowed for a so-called registration hunt for subsistence of about 150 animals and a drawing hunt, in which 23 permits were issued. In subsistence hunts, ADF&G has the discretion – and uses it – to destroy and cut horns so that they lose their trophy value. This is meant to accomplish that in hunts the large, mature bulls are not the only ones targeted and taken out of the population.

Gorn also said that the horn destruction is used to discourage hunters seeking trophies from participating in the subsistence hunt. If, like last year, the amount necessary for subsistence exceeds the Board of Game's set number of 100 to 150 animals, a draw hunt is allowed. Hunters who drew a permit and paid a $500 resident tag fee for it (nonresidents: $1,100; alien hunters $1,500), get to keep the horns.

During their last meeting in March, the Board of Game proposed to do away with the horn destruction and to change the bag limits in the subsistence hunt to exclude mature bulls, but tabled any action on it until the public had a chance to weigh in. The Board's argument was that destruction of horns is disrespectful to the animal taken.

Tony Gorn laid out the reasons for the department to say: Do not adopt the proposal. Last year, 1,926 Alaska residents and 147 non-residents applied for a drawing permit. This is on top of 373 permits issued to subsistence registration hunters.

If the BoG proposal prevails, the hunting pressure on the Seward Peninsula musk oxen would be greater than the population can take. Another reason is that latest census numbers suggest that while the Seward Peninsula musk oxen population grew between 2000 and 2008, growth stabilized and may even be in decline. "At this time, we don't have enough animals to support a surplus hunt," Gorn said. "I didn't realize this until recently that we are in a Tier II situation. The only place not affected is Shishmaref and unit 22 F."

Gorn talked about red flags he sees as recruitment rates are declining in the other game units, the ratio between mature bulls and cows has declined and the population structure is changing. According to Gorn, hunters have changed the population as they killed mostly mature bulls.

Gorn said hunters want to avoid mistakes by taking the wrong animal and also, mature bulls are literally presenting themselves for the kill. This has resulted in a change in population, as the biggest bull was removed from the herd.

Gorn, while warning that his data collection from collared cow musk oxen is very small, said that he found an 18 percent mortality rate in cows. "Cows are usually not the ones getting killed that easily," said Gorn. "If we are losing 18 percent females, then we lose at least 18 percent on the male side."

Asked when they die and what they die of, Gorn said that none of them died in the wintertime. "All of them died in June, July and August," he said. And why? There are many reasons to die out there, he said. Bears learn how to catch musk oxen and one of his collared cows was found with her face full of porcupine quills. Gorn also told a story of where a musk ox cow dropped a calf and within a few seconds, another musk ox cow came down the hill, hooked the baby and tossed the newborn down the mountain.

Gorn also told the committee that can be hunted. She pointed out that the BoG has the power to change the statute that sets the amount necessary for subsistence.

Tony Gorn said in closing that there were 122 harvestable animals this year compared to 177 last year. "If we drop 55 animals [from the harvestable surplus] we can't afford for the system to change," Gorn said.

Between the lines, it was speculated that the Board of Game is prejudiced to push trophy hunting opportunities.

The take home message was to

there is just not enough literature out there on musk oxen. "Moose populations have been studied for many, many years and we just don't know what happens with musk ox populations when you take 40 to 50 percent of mature bulls out of a certain herd," said Gorn. "There are many things that we don't know about these animals."

Richard Kuzuguk from Shishmaref said that musk oxen present a good and easy source of food. "The success rate for hunting compared to moose is so much higher," he said. He said that he and people from Shishmaref are concerned about an influx of safari hunters should the board proposal succeed.

Rose Fosdick also said that people have for years waited for musk ox herds to grow so that the animals not adopt the proposal as the population can't withstand high numbers of hunters, subsistence hunters could no longer kill a large bull and the forecast would be that the musk ox hunt would go into Tier II as a result of an increased hunt under the proposal

Two members of the Board of Game were present at the meeting. Nate Turner of Kantishna and Nowitna rivers and Stosh Hoffmann of Bethel were sitting in and listening to the lengthy discussions, saying they would take the advisory committee's concerns to the full board meeting in November.

The advisory committee decided to draft a statement to the Board of Game to explain the rationale for rejecting proposal 23 and advocating to keep the status quo.

Game advisory members push earlier grizzly bear hunt

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Northern Norton Sound Advisory Committee has backed a proposal to Board of Game to lengthen the brown bear season in Game Management Unit 22C but stopped short of going along with the proposed 10-month season to align the subunit regulations with the remainder of GMU 22. The advisory committee also agreed with a proposed amendment from Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game to keep the bag limits the same, whereas the proposal to the Board of Game called for increased bag limits.

Issues driving the change include an under-harvested bear population, bear predation on local ungulates in spring, predation on reindeer and bear-human run-ins, as well as a desire to hunt more days on favorable terrain

GMU 22 wraps the Bering Sea and Norton Sound coasts from Kotzebue Sound on the north and stops short of Kotlik on the south. A division of the unit, GMU 22C covers the Nome area and surroundings. Several organizations interested in hunting and predation control—Reindeer Herders Association, Seward Peninsula Regional Advisory Committee, Northern Norton Sound Advisory Committee and Nome Sportsmen Association—have together proposed a change in brown bear hunting regulations for consideration at the state Board of Game meeting slated for November.

On Oct. 12-13, the advisory committee met in Nome to discuss this and other game management proposals in the works. Proposition 24 asks for a 10-month hunting season for brown bear from Aug.1 through May 31 with a bag limit of one bear every regulatory year for residents and a bag limit of one bear every regulatory year for nonresidents by drawing permit. A regulatory year is defined as July 1 through June 30. The current GMU 22C rule has a spring season from May 10 to 25 and a fall season from Aug. 1 through Oct. 31.

The state Department of Fish and Game provided an analysis of the proposal that advocated a season date change that added 15 days to the spring hunt, from May 1 through May 31 and kept the fall hunt the same, from Aug. 1 through Oct. 31. Additionally, the Dept. of Fish and Game advocated keeping the bag limits the same: a general hunt bag limit of one bear every four regulatory years and a subsistence regulation hunt bag limit of one bear every regulatory year.

The advisory committee went with the Fish and Game department position of keeping the bag limits the same, the fall hunt dates the same. but voted 11-1 with committee member Tom Gray's suggestion to open the spring season even earlier than the department advocated, from April 15 to May 31 for a total of 46 days. Sentiment among the panel members was that an earlier season would allow better travel conditions on snowy frozen stable terrain before warming turned trails to mush. Gray thought the 46-day season had a better chance of getting past the Board of Game than the 10-month season.

A graph provided showed a total of more than 20 bears taken on April 26 over the past 20 years from 22B where the hunt opens earlier and moose population is lower than game managers desire.

According to game managers, musk ox and moose numbers are near target numbers in Unit 22 C; however, numbers for these animals are down in 22B, a division adjacent that includes Council, Skookum Pass and Fox River areas. Game managers do not want to shift hunting pressure on brown bear from 22B to

"In 21 B, west of Darby Mountain, the moose population is below our population objective of 1,200 moose; the 2010 survey estimated 570 moose," Letty Hughes, assistant area wildlife biologist for ADF&G, said. "We want hunting pressure during the end of April to be focused in areas where it is needed the most."

Committee member Dan Stang had comments as regards shifting hunting pressure from 22B to 22C where Nome residents make up 58 percent of brown bear harvest by Alaska residents (2000-2010).

"The percentage harvests in 22B are probably involving me. By lengthening the season in 22C, I would not shift to 22C," Stang said.

And committee member Adem Boeckmann: "It might be encouraging more hunters into the equation if it were more accessible." Gray observed that large trees in 22 B protect bears and provide a "tremendous advantage for bears."

If the Board of Game instead were to pass the original proposal to lengthen the season and increase the bag limits, proponents say moose harvests would improve with effective bear harvests lowering predation through greater hunting opportunity and improve quality of hides by allowing later fall and earlier spring harvests. Spring bear kills for "defense of life and property" on bears predating reindeer fawns would turn into legal sport harvests and benefit the reindeer industry. Additionally, but not least, the public would benefit through decreased human and bear conflicts.

The state would benefit through lower enforcement costs and through GMU 22-wide bear management under one season and bag limit.

In light of the action on Proposal 24, the advisory panel did not address a couple of additional proposals to lengthen the GMU 22C season to 10 months or to year around, proposed by Austin Ahmasuk and Sandra Tahbone, respectively.

Superintendent report

Mike Brawner, superintendent, has begun seeking input regarding the prioritization of objectives developed in the school's Strategic Plan. Nickels and Amarok felt that all objectives were important and were reluctant to put one objective above another. Brawner explained that he wished NPS had money to fund all the objectives; however, the school district was looking at a halfmillion less dollars in revenue at the end of the year without anything happening, e.g., increase in health costs, fuel and energy increases, etc. Therefore, a prioritization of objectives would be important due to a shrinking budget.

AR 5131.43 Harassment, Intimidation and Bullying was another topic Brawner brought up, citing that school policy and regulations are "doorstep to doorstep" expectations of conduct, which includes the traveling to and from school.

Reader requested that the board consider changing the meeting day from Tuesday to another day in the week due to a conflict she has with a prior commitment. It was decided that board members would think about it, take a look at their schedules and discuss it at the next meeting.

Four policies – first reading

All four action items were first readings of board policies including: BP 3512 Equipment Usage, BP 5119 Children of Military Families, BP 5125.3 Withholding Grades, Diploma, or Transcripts and BP 5138 Portable Electronic Devices, Including Cellular and were passed by the board unanimously.

Board's handling of community concerns

The meeting concluded with Amarok sharing specific, performance concerns regarding an identifiable NPS staff member.

Nickels commented, "It's been my understanding that we've been in the paper more than we need to be in the paper about speaking to a staff performance in open meetings and I wondered if, Barb, you have brought those concerns to the Superintendent as is the line of communication when you hear community concerns?" Brief discussion followed about emails to the board, and who did and didn't receive them, before Board President Brennan asked that the policy addressing this issue be reviewed at the next board meeting.

The Nome Board of Education will meet again in a work session on Tuesday, October 25 at 5:30 p.m. at the NES Library. Topics will include: NPS audit report, Read 90 presentation, superintendent evaluation form, legislative priorities, board committee assignments, Strategic Plan priorities, meeting schedule change, and potential Nome Elementary School honor roll.

Nome Nanook Swim Team Delivers!

By Kirsten Bey

The recipients of the bagels delivered by the returning Nanook swimmers last Sunday probably weren't aware that the swimmers also delivered great results at the swim meet over the weekend.

Last weekend six high school swimmers traveled to Palmer for the annual Valley Invitational Swim Meet. Teams from 14 different schools attended and there were upwards of 270 swimmers. The Nome Boys' team came in seventh overall with 10 points. While no individual swimmers earned points, both of the Boys' relay teams finished in the money (well in the point category). The Boys' 200-yard freestyle relay was third overall with a time of 1:43.03, with 18 teams competing. Their 200-yard medley relay was with 20 teams competing. The Palmer High School boys' team earned 15 points and they had 15 male swimmers. The Colony High School team earned 16 points and they had 11 male swimmers. Nome had just four male swimmers. All four of Nome's male swimmers swam in both relays. Of the six finalist teams in the two relays, none of the other schools had the same swimmers in both relays expect Soldotna had one swimmer on both teams. The boys on the swim team are Klay Baker, freshman; Nathan Blandford, senior; Jake Stettenbenz, sophomore; and Zach Sullivan, junior.

In individual events the swimmers accomplished a lot, in most events setting personal best times:

Klay Baker was 17th (out of 47)

sixth overall with a time of 2:02.17, in the 50-yard freestyle with a time of 27.05 seconds. (As a freshman this will serve as a time to beat in future races). Klay was 10th out of 16 in the 100-yard butterfly - a tough stroke to swim. Again his time of 1:09.72 will be a time to keep lowering as he continues his high school swimming career.

Nathan Blandford was 7th (out of 47) in the 50-yard freestyle with a personal best time of 24.83 seconds. Nathan was 9th (out of 40) in the 100-yard freestyle, again with a personal best time of 54.83 seconds.

• Jake Stettenbenz was 14th (out of 47) in the 50-yard freestyle with a time of 25.71 seconds. Jake also competed in the 200-yard individual medley event, swimming 50 yards each of four different strokes. He swam a personal best with a time of

2:41.91, taking more than a one half second off his best time from last year.

• Zach Sullivan was 17th (out of 47) in the 50 freestyle with a time of 27.81 seconds. Zach swam the 100 yard breaststroke in 1:22.64, finishing 17th out of 31 swimmers and decreasing his time by 9 seconds from last year's Valley Invitational Swim

Two girls traveled to the Valley Invite, not enough for a relay team. In individual events Devynn Johnson finished 12th (out of 38) in the 50 yard freestyle with a time of 29.10 seconds. Devynn also competed in the 100 yard breaststroke finishing 11th (out of 33) with a time of 1:23.14.

Lacy Erickson participated in her first high school meet, and the judges were really tough on her. Due to nervousness she jumped into the water early in her 500-yard freestyle event. The judges believed she did it on purpose, so they didn't let her swim. She also swam the 100-yard backstroke and finished with a time of 1:30.88, which would put her at 21st (out of 31 swimmers).

This year has been a challenge for the swimmers because the heating mechanism in the pool has not been working and the kids have had to swim in 76°F water. While it is a good temperature for swimming laps and working out, it's a bit of a rude awakening at 6 a.m. each morning. The swimmers have been really good sports about it with hardly a complaint.

Congratulations to all the swimmers. Their next meet is the regional meet in Fairbanks the weekend of October 28-29.

And the winners are...Ulus, health food, and unique tours: Variety marks 2011 SBI winners

By Tyler Rhodes, Communications Director Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

Aurora Johnson/Siku Tours: With the slogan, "Don't Just Visit, Live It", Unalakleet's Aurora Johnson is working to start Siku Tours. Johnson plans to offer clients a more hands-on experience than traditional tours by creating packages that are largely built around the subsistence activities that make up such a large part of the lifestyle in rural Alaska. Johnson aims to show visitors more than just the landscape of the region. "Other tours give a small taste of what Alaska is like," she said. "I love to share our tradition, our way of life, our culture.'

Johnson said Siku Tours will offer trips that feature activities such as winter crabbing, sea mammal viewing, berry and greens picking, ice fishing and northern lights viewing. The tours will change with the seasons. She said that the venture should impact more communities than just Unalakleet, noting that trips like dog sled tours would take visitors—and potential customersthrough neighboring villages.

Johnson hopes to capitalize on the rising popularity of eco-tourism and Alaska's prominence in the realm of reality television, including the Discovery Channel series "Flying Wild Alaska" which is predominately filmed in Unalakleet.

Johnson received $25,000 in funding, much of which will be directed toward accommodations for Siku Tours' guests.

Andreanna Grishkowsky / Ocean Stone Ulu: Unalakleet's Andreanna Grishkowsky has given a new twist to an ancient design. Under the name Ocean Stone Ulu, Grishkowsky uses rocks she has gathered from the beach as handles on the traditional Alaska Native knives.

The idea for the distinctive ulu knives arrived shortly after Grishkowsky finished a graduate program in design and returned to Unalakleet. "I was walking along the beach and it just clicked," she said. In addition to the unique handles, Grishkowsky's knives feature stylishly shaped blades.

Her ulu design gained a wider audience after a knife she donated to the Sewing Circle Auction in Unalakleet spurred interest and requests for more. Grishkowsky realized that she likely had a marketable product on her hands. "I've made 50 [knives] between the auction and now," she said.

Grishkowsky was awarded $25,000 in SBI funds. She said she plans to use the award money to invest in more raw material for the blades, to set up a shop and for marketing and a website.

Frank Doty/Norton Sound Refrigeration Inc.: Also from Unalakleet, Frank Doty plans to take the training and experience he has gained from NSEDC and offer his services as a refrigeration technician. Doty is currently the assistant manager of the Norton Sound Seafood Products plant in Unalakleet, a position he plans on keeping as he operates his refrigeration business on the frigeration service, noticed a need for people with his skill set in the region. "There are very few refrigeration technicians. I would like to serve the region's needs," he said. As many Norton Sound residents know, when a freezer or cooler stops working, finding someone to fix it most often means a long wait for someone from Anchorage to come make an expensive repair—if they can find someone to come at all.

Doty sees potential in working to serve the entire region. He hopes to eventually expand and hire others to help him grow the business. "Expansion, that's what I'm looking for," he said.

Doty was awarded $16,000.

Michelle Ames-Keene/JAK Enterprises dba La Cabana: Nome's Michelle Ames-Keene has already had a small taste of small business. In what could be called a precursor to her new venture, Ames-Keene set up shop on Nome's West Beach last summer to sell coffee drinks, soups and hamburgers.

With La Cabana, the food and coffee drink part of the business carries on, but it won't stay put. Ames-Keene plans to make her food service mobile. "It's a small bus that would have a fully contained kitchen," she said. "The idea is to do fresh food, fast." She said she aims to serve events and conferences, as well as being able to catch tourist traffic in the summer. She plans to maintain a focus on healthy items and will not be serving French fries or soda.

Like Doty, Ames-Keene has her eyes set beyond her immediate neighborhood. She said if the business takes off, she would like to offer scaled-down versions of the food service in kiosks in other Norton Sound communities besides Nome. She thinks setting up near the villages' airstrips could prove fruitful.

Ames-Keene was awarded $14,000 through the program. She said the funding will primarily be directed at acquiring the mobile unit and outfitting it for food service.

Erin Forton/Bering Tea: Nome's Erin Forton is also looking to feed Nomeites and visitors to the Gold Rush City with healthy fare. Forton plans to open Bering Tea in a building she recently purchased, fittingly, on Bering Street. Bering Tea will incorporate a bakery, coffee shop and health food cooperative under one roof

These two aspects of the business will help fund the venture she truly wants to bring to Nome, the health food cooperative. A health food coop essentially works like a bulk food section in a supermarket, except that the bulk food is brought to the cooperative's members rather than them travelling to the store.

Forton is excited about Bering Tea's location, noting that it is along the route that leads to two of Nome's largest employers, Kawerak and Norton Sound Health Corp. "It's the perfect business location," she said.

Forton sees a need in Nome for a coffee shop that has a quiet atmosphere where people can get a cup of tea and sit in a corner and read or study. She also plans to offer health food classes at Bering Tea that would be associated with the cooperative.

Forton was awarded $13,000 in grant funding. She said much of her funding will be directed toward the renovation of her kitchen and the purchase of equipment, such as an espresso machine.

Chester Millet, Jr/LJM Enterprises: Unalakleet's Chester Millet, Jr.'s venture, LJM Enterprises, is built upon a renewable resource—snow. LJM Enterprises is in the business of getting rid of the white stuff that arrives in abundance in Unalakleet for more months than most residents would like. "You know with snow, it's going to be there every year," he said.

Millet said beyond the snow removal service provided by the city in Unalakleet, options are limited for those who need more areas cleared. Using a Bobcat—a small loader—Millet started clearing snow on his own last year as well as renting the equipment out to others. The latter proved the most profitable as construction and other work crews traveling to Unalakleet to work often needed the Bobcat to get their jobs done. "There were a lot of companies coming through," he said.

Millet is looking to expand his business by adding a large snow-blower to his available equipment. He said the $12,000 he was awarded will be directed toward that purchase and to help cover freight expenses.

Expert panel says men should not be screened for prostate cancer

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

A major U.S. government panel of experts is recommending that men should no longer be screened for prostate cancer.

Based on recent research, the United States Preventive Services Task Force released a draft recommendation earlier this month stating that screening for prostate cancer does not save lives. In fact the panel claims that screening may cause more harm than benefit because positive screening tests lead to potentially damaging treatments that may leave men impotent or incontinent.

Prostate cancer is the second leading cause of cancer-related deaths in men in the United States, second only to lung cancer. According to the American Cancer Society one in every six men will be diagnosed with prostate cancer at some point during his lifetime. About one in every 36 men will die of prostate cancer.

Since the 1990s, a screening test has been available to catch early cases of prostate cancer. But the test itself has become a source of confusion and controversy.

The test measures levels of prostate specific antigen (PSA) in the blood stream. PSA is a protein produced by both normal and cancerous cells in the prostate. Rapidly growing cancer cells produce a higher level of PSA than do normal cells.

A low level of PSA is always present in the bloodstream. Most doctors consider a level below 4 ng/mL to be normal. Some urologists and cancer specialists have suggested a lower level of 2.5 ng/mL should be the cutoff between normal and elevated PSA. But having abnormal PSA levels does not always mean a man has cancer

There are many things other than cancer that make a PSA level rise. These include: infections of the prostate or bladder; an enlargement of the prostate called benign prostatic hypertrophy; and direct pressure on the prostate, which could be the result of activities like riding a bicycle, four-wheeler, or snowmachine.

The only way to know if a man with an elevated PSA has cancer is to perform a biopsy of the prostate, a walnut-sized gland that surrounds the urinary tract at the base of a man's bladder. This is a delicate procedure performed by urologists.

Studies show that the PSA is only 67 percent accurate at predicting whether a man has prostate cancer or not. While this is a little better than the 50 percent predictability of flipping a coin, it is far from perfect.

The USPSTF is concerned that prostate cancer screening is not only inaccurate but also that testing causes harm to men without preventing death.

Though one in six men will eventually develop prostate cancer, the vast majority of men with prostate cancer will die from some other

One large trial showed that 1,410 men would have to be screened and 48 additional cancers would have to be detected to prevent one death from prostate cancer. In essence this means 47 men must be over-treated to prevent one death.

No one would argue with the value of a life saved. But PSA screening leads to an increased number of biopsies and prostate surgeries that have risks that threaten a man's quality of life. The most feared risks associated with prostate procedures are impotence and incontinence.

Not all professional medical organizations agree with the USPSTF recommendation. Many physicians and public health groups continue to recommend prostate cancer screening, but they vary widely in their specific guidelines.

In general, the following recommendations from various groups provide some guidance based on the best data available:

The National Comprehensive Cancer Center Guidelines on the Early Detection of Prostate Cancer recommend an initial PSA test at age 40 to determine a baseline level. Any PSA result over 2.5 ng/mL should be evaluated further for risk of prostate cancer. PSA screening at regular intervals may be used to detect an upward trend in the PSA level, called PSA velocity.

The American Urological Association recommends offering PSA screening beginning at age 50 in men with at least a 10-year life expectancy. African-American men and those with a first-degree relative with prostate cancer should consider screening at an earlier age.

A study published in the British Medical Journal suggested that men with a single PSA level of less than 1 ng/mL at age 60 do not require further screening because the lifetime risk of developing prostate cancer was only 0.2 percent for this group.

The American College of Preventive Medicine recommends discontinuing PSA screening in the asymptomatic male after age 75.

The American Academy of Family Physicians recommends that patients speak with a trusted provider about symptoms of prostate disease, like urinary urgency, frequency, or erectile dysfunction and whether or not PSA screening is indicated as a part of an overall health assessment.

Prostate cancer is a serious threat to the lives of men. Though scientists continue to search for a reliable screening test to detect the disease early, at this point, the best of our tests do not answer the one question we are really asking: "Who will die of prostate cancer if we fail to act?" For those answers a man must rely on guidance from a trusted physician

What's the buzz about Medicare changing??

HERE'S THE FACTS FOR PEOPLE ON MEDICARE:

If you have a Medicare Prescription Drug Plan (Part D) you have an EARLIER period of time in which to review your current prescription insurance coverage, compare what else is available and enroll in a different plan for 2012. You have from October 15th through December 7th to make that change. Be on the lookout for your written "annual notice of change" letter in the US mail. It will tell you what the changes will be in pricing, drug coverage, co-payments and/or deductibles in 2012. If everything looks fine, you can leave the plan as is. If you want to compare what you have with other options and you use a computer or have a caregiver or family member to help, go to medicare.gov, chose "compare drug and health plans," enter your zipcode, medications and see what other plans are available. You can enroll in a new plan online or call the company's tollfree number and speak to an agent who will take your request by phone. There are many tribal facilities, clinics, senior centers, agencies serving seniors and people with disabilities that have Certified Medicare counselors. Acting on this quickly may save you a lot of money and frustration at the pharmacy in 2012.

If you need help with the Medicare options, get out your red, white and blue Medicare card and your prescription information and call Alaska's Medicare Information Office at 800-478-6065 or (907) 269-3680. If Jeanné or Judith don't answer your call on the spot, please leave them your name and phone number and zipcode. Protect your identity by NOT leaving us your Medicare number. If you have a limited income and limited resources please mention that, as well, so the counselor can see if you might qualify for the federal "extra help" program and submit the application online.

More Letters

nounced See-You) have borrowed and spent, some would say squandered, many millions of our region's CDQ program dollars on the pollock trawl industry. Those debts will have to be repaid. The only known effective way to protect salmon is to shut down pollock trawling and if that is done, and it should be, the fisheries economists tell us it will mean greatly reduced profits for the trawlers particularly for the smaller catcher vessels that deliver to shoreside plants in Dutch Harbor. The NSEDC recently bought five of these vessels. The purchase price has been kept secret from the stakeholders but it was in the tens of millions of dollars; rumors say it was $51 million but we have no way of knowing. That's a lot of money taken from a poor region that could have been spent on something a lot less risky and that would have done a lot more to benefit people at home.

The magnitude of the salmon bycatch is incredible. During 1991-2011, the pollock trawlers killed and wasted 2,849,360 chum salmon if you believe the numbers and in reality, it was probably a lot more. To put that in perspective, the number of chum salmon killed and wasted by the trawlers was more than four times the number harvested by Norton Sound commercial salmon fishermen during the same time period.

The NSEDCs refusal to talk to the owners of the CDQ program about salmon bycatch is not unexpected. For reasons which are beyond me, they bought into the dirtiest sector of a dirty fishery and went heavily into debt to do it. The trawl industry does not want restrictions designed to save chum salmon placed on their fishery. They are being squeezed between increasing operating costs because of rising fuel prices and other factors and poor markets for pollock because of the downturn in the world economy and availability of alternative fish products.

In his article, Tyler says, "NSEDC and its board members take seriously the issue of salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery. Like the residents they represent, NSEDC board members are commercial and subsistence fishermen who are keenly aware of the value of healthy salmon returns to their communities.'

Nobody can believe that the communities the NSEDC board represents have been experiencing healthy salmon returns during the past 20 years. Nobody can argue that pollock trawl bycatch is not a significant factor limiting those returns. NSEDC should stand with the local organizations that have called for a 30,000 hard cap on chum bycatch. The federal subsistence board has recommended a 50,000 hard cap with triggered closures at 25,000. The NSEDC needs to join its stakeholders and stop providing political support for the unconscionable destruction and waste of our salmon

The NSEDC should stop behaving like one of the multinational Seattle based trawler companies and recognize that their primary mission is not to maximize industrial profits but to address poverty and lack of a sustainable economy in Norton Sound communities. Going bankrupt in foolish, for-profit commercial fishing ventures is not the way to do either one of those things.

The NSEDC needs to start talking to the owners of the CDQ program now about salmon bycatch. The excuses Tyler gave in his article for avoiding the issue are invalid. They got away with doing that with king salmon and now we are stuck with a 60,000 king salmon bycatch hard cap, which is way too high.

Among the alternatives being considered by the council is a 353,000 annual hard cap or no limit at all. Is that what we want? The NSEDC will be speaking for all of us when the issue is considered by the council. It affects everybody who cares about the health of our salmon stocks, not just the chosen few who are in control. The NSEDC needs to facilitate a meaningful dialogue with its constituents and quit making up excuses for hiding behind closed doors in Anchorage.

Nuisance musk ox

how stupid some people are to get closer to musk oxen than they would ever dare to get to bears or moose.

He asked the advisory committee to put their feelers out on what the public wants. "How many musk oxen do you want here in 22C?" Gorn asked.

Two weeks ago, yet another dog was attacked by a musk ox, this time in the subdivision at the base of Anvil Mountain. Ramon Gandia's dog was attacked by a single musk ox, who hooked the collar; the dog slipped out and ran for its life. The German shepherd later returned home with a small puncture wound, was medically attended to and Gandia said that he could deal with that, but what really concerns him as a pilot and a wildlife observer is that some herds tend to congregate near the airport and what a disaster it would be if a musk ox herd would be on the runway as a jet approaches.

These concerns were also brought up at the advisory committee's meeting, along with jurisdictional confusion. The inevitable question was asked: "Who are we gonna call? Ghostbusters?"

Tom Gray said he was disturbed about the slow reaction time from the authorities when it comes to wildlife emergencies. Grav said earlier this summer, he called 911 about a bear sow and two cubs being on top of a fresh moose kill in his yard. He said it was early in the morning, but people were getting ready for their day, jogging on the road and yet no response until the sow and cubs were gone."

The advisory committee took no action on the matter but asked members Charlie Lean and Paul Kosto to draft a letter to the Nome Police Department asking for a clear protocol and procedure how to deal with wildlife emer-

Nobody from the Nome Police Department was present for the meeting, but NPD Chief John Papasodora said in an interview with The Nome Nugget that while there is no written protocol how to handle nuisance musk oxen, there are protocols that the NPD follows to assess the severity of the situation. "If somebody's life or property is in danger, then people should call us immediately," Papasodora said. "If there is a Wildlife Trooper available, both AST and NPD would respond as quickly as possible."

However, he said, if there are reports of a musk oxen hanging around in the neighborhood and there is no real emergency, Papasodora said, still call NPD. "We still try to respond and if our officers are tied up with a different case, we do notify the Troopers and Fish and Game." Papasodora added, "We do live in the wilderness and we have to cope with animals and they can be dangerous. People need to be vigilant.'

A man from Shishmaref reported that musk oxen also harass berry pickers. What if in an emergency they have to defend their lives? Alaska State law allows for killing of animals in defense of life and property, but also prescribes a certain procedure after the kill.

Acknowledging that when going berry picking, one rarely has a skinning knife and game bag along, Alaska State wildlife Trooper Brian Miller was on hand to answer the question. "Yes, the process is cumbersome, but you have to harvest the salvageable meat of the animal. At that point it becomes the property of the State of Alaska and can be given to charity," said Miller.

North Slope Borough elections are official

The North Slope Borough made its election results official and certified the results last week. The eyes of state-wide media outlets were fixed on the mayoral race, which featured five candidates and Fenton Rexford, who ran a write-in campaign. Since no candidate leads with 40 percent of the votes, a run-off election between Charlotte Brower and runner-up George Ahmaogak, Sr. is necessary to determine who will steer the North Slope Borough through the next term.

Brower received 592 votes, Ahmaogak Sr. had 540 votes. There were 553 write-ins, with 535 votes cast for Assembly Seat B went to Doreen Ahgeak Lampe, Seat D to Ray Koonuk Sr. and Seat F – the only seat with more than one candidate – went to Vernon James Edwardsden.

Arnold Brower Jr. won School Board Seat B, Amos Nashoopuk, uncontested, won School Board seat E. Out of 4,304 registered voters in the North Slope Borough, 1,882 cast their ballots. The run-off election is are scheduled for November 8.

study as some of the potential occupants of a state building in 2010 have made other arrangements.

Council member Mary Knodel wanted to know how the City would be without risk, and what risk Nanuq Development would be taking if the City obtained the loan through the bond bank.

"I don't see what your risk is. I see big risk for the City," she said. "If you are going to give maintenance to the state that did not maintain the building they have, then in 40 years it will be junk, a risk to the City."

Pfeffer said the contract would spell out terms to take the City off the hook for the loan/bonds and that Nanuq would obtain the construction loan at no risk to the City.

Sitnasuak had five to six options in mind and wanted to forge a public-private partnership, Hoffman said.

Mayor Denise Michels threw out that the governor was concerned with the cost of leasing vs. building a facility. "The state clearly told us a building has to be in the range of what they would build themselves," she said.

"Our way would be the designbuild concept," Hoffman said. He enumerated three things the state wanted—not expensive, financing cost as low as possible—where the City comes in with ability to get a low-interest loan—and review by the Dept. of Revenue to ensure costs are conservative and the procurement was "squeaky clean."

"It is a non-starter if we can't build it at the right cost," Hoffman said, and recommended a contractor vs. an architect, as a contractor was more cost conscious.

"Today you are asking if we want to go to bed with you," Councilmember Stan Andersen observed. "I have to go out and sell this to people."

Hoffman asked whether the Council still wanted to go along with last year's concept, that the City would contract with Nanuq LLC as majority landholder with Nanuq acting as construction manager and general contractor, pulling together the design and construction, in a way that upfront capital costs would not be a burden on state or local residents.

"We still want it downtown and we still want it on the tax rolls," Andersen responded.

A lively give and take produced an agreement in concept spelled out this week by Knodel: The City will do a government to government contract with Sitnasuak to build, provide interim financing, for a guaranteed price, and when the building is finished, the City will sell the building to the state the same day. Sitnasuak/Nanuq Development would handle the contract and make sure there would be a margin built in to compensate the City in lieu of taxes. All business concerning the City and the building would be conducted by open and public resolutions.

"This way we get what we want, a building on Front Street and PILOT [payment in lieu of taxes]," Knodel said. "If it goes out to bid, there is no guarantee the building will be on Front Street."

The next step will be to notify the state Department of Administration that the City wants to go ahead with the project.

AFN calls for better relationship with state government

By Diana Haecker

Mending and improving relationships stood front and center at this year's Alaska Federation of Natives Convention, held at the Dena'ina Center in Anchorage last week.

The theme of the 2011 AFN was "Strength in Unity." It takes unity in order to unleash the combined power of the Native community – that was the gist of many speeches. AFN president Julie Kitka reminded AFN delegates that this strength was shown during last year's Senatorial election, when the Native community threw their weight behind Lisa Murkowski in her historical and successful writein campaign.

Kotzebue's Reggie Joule said, "We delivered the money for a political campaign and then we delivered the votes. And then there was a celebration of that strength that so many people have been waiting to see." It is that strength that was called upon over and over again during the convention.

The cry for unity was to rally delegates behind the idea to be serious about a push to better relationships among tribes, Native village corporations and Native regional corporations, as well as the State of Alaska and the various state departments, and the federal government.

Akiak tribal leader Mike Williams said that many things need mending. It has been 40 years since the Alaska Native Settlement Acts passed. In exchange for extinguishing future claims to land, Native Alaskans settled for 44.5 million acres of their ancestral lands and a payment of more than $900 million. ANCSA created Native corporations that were meant to provide economic opportunities for tribal members.

Williams said while there are great successes, there still are many issues that need resolution. What can be done to amend ANCSA to restore aboriginal hunting and fishing

Gold miners Mike Benchoff and Scott Meisterheim were among high bidders for tracts in an offshore minerals lease sale held Sept. 28 in Nome by the Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources. They bid on small, nearshore tracts in an outcry auction.

However, a qualifying statement required for all bidders in the sale is not on file for Benchoff and Meisterheim, according to Kerwin Krause, mineral property manager for DNR's Division of Mining, Land and Water. Krause said he notified the miners by phone on Sept. 30 that their qualifying statements were missing and then searched all sale documents three times in a futile effort to find them.

A few other bidders placed their names on a qualifying statement form, but did not check the boxes verifying they are United States citizens and 18 years of age or sign the document, Krause noted. He said the DNR has delayed publishing a list of the three highest bidders for each tract offered in the lease sale while

Council to address high energy costs

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council took initial action on five budget revision items Monday, unanimously passing them into second reading and final passage at the next regular meeting Nov. 14. These spending plans deal with revenue and expenditure adjustments to the 2011 general fund budget, construction capital projects, special revenue budget, capital projects fund budget and the Port of Nome fund budget. Copies of all are available at Nome City Hall.

In other business the Council approved a bid award to Arctic Slope Regional Corp. Builders, Inc. for a high mast lighting project at Port of Nome. Bid opening Oct. 7 showed a range of $897,000 (ASRC) to $1,085,105 from Hot Wire Electric. Other bids were from Puffin Electric, $898,200; Alaska Mechanical, $997,750; and Pro-West Contractors, $1,035,000. The engineers estimated the cost at $833,135 a year

TALKING HANDS— Elders with the King Island dancers rocked the house during dance performances on Wednesday night at the AFN convention, held at the Dena'ina Convention Center in Anchorage.

Letters -

Dear Nancy:

Recently Nome had the privilege of having the Dept of Natural Resources, (Alaska) permitting folks come to our town. The intended purpose was to get public opinion on how to improve and speed up permitting processes. There should have been time for everyone to come forward with their compliment or Unfortunately, the complaint. miner's code was not honored (whereby one works hard and talks little), and the meeting was dominated by a few people repeating the same complaints. We would like to take this opportunity now to voice our opinion, as we didn't get an opportunity at the public meeting without interrupting repeated dialogue.

The offshore lease sale is owned and was conducted by the State of Alaska under State of Alaska Rules and Regulations. Perhaps reading the Alaska Statutes and Alaska Administrative Code could enlighten some as to the rules and regulations about bidding on any State bid. It is the bidder's responsibility to request a bid packet, read, study and understand the bid packet and process. Then perform your paperwork according to the bid packet and become successful in the bidding process. No portion of the above can be legally deviated from. It is not the State's duty to comply for the bidder's irresponsibility. It is the bidder's responsibility. Millions and millions of dollars of bids have been disqualified over the years within the State of Alaska and lost due to a small bid error. Unfortunate but true, and a lesson we ourselves have learned the hard way in the past.

We and many others received our bid packet, studied the bid packet, prepared our paperwork and turned in our required documents to enter the bid process. We did not find the bid process chaotic, but normal. We studied hard, prepared ourselves the best we could and systematically entered the bid process. If it was the first time for someone to be in a competitive bid process and an outcry auction, and they were not prepared for the process, it might have seemed chaotic to them, but it was in fact, the normal process.

We attended this permitting meeting to be helpful and learn what we could about streamlining the permitting process. We have done many prospecting and mining permits through the years, and they are complicated. We applaud Governor Parnell in working with the participants in mining to streamline this large process. Prospecting and mining permits are a lot of work, but necessary for the privilege of mining in Alaska.

After hearing the accusations against the current DNR personnel - who work in the mining division, it has become apparent that there are

Corporate Influence

Corporations are individuals. They may not have a heart or a soul and they can't vote, but they must be treated as individuals when it comes to paying taxes. How much leniency should the State of Alaska give to big multinational corporations to make it easier for them to do business in Alaska? Nomeites will remember the "Roads to Resources" program that built a brand new highway across the tundra right up to the front door of NovaGold's Rock Creek Mine. The state even paid the gold company to supply the gravel for their new road. Would they have done the same for a local corporation or individual who wanted to build a hotel along the banks of Glacier Creek?

Corporations are to be treated as individuals, but it seems the state frequently confuses them for royalty. Maybe this is because they are expected to pay royalty payments for use of state land. Corporations are not above the law and the state need not turn a blind eye to potential problems. In Nome NovaGold has several tons of explosive grade ammonium nitrate stored unsecured only ½ mile from our high school. NovaGold claims it is nothing but fertilizer. Yep! It's fertilizer. Just a little bit of this same kind of fertilizer claimed a lot of lives when the Murra Building was blown up in Oklahoma City a few years back. We have too many instances of favoritism and special consideration for big multinational corporations at the expense of public safety.

We need to realize that the special interests of big corporations are not what is best for Alaskans. We should not be too anxious to give away our resources. We should not give special tax breaks to big names. Sure, we always hear the jobs mantra. We remember hearing it in Nome, but look what it brought us. Families were afraid to let their daughters walk down Front Street. It's not about jobs, it's about well-financed political demands. Readers can contact their state senators and representatives to urge their attention to this problem.

Native and environmental challenge drilling permits

The Environmental Protection Agency issued the final Clean Air Permit to Shell's exploration vessel Kulluk. The Kulluk and its own fleet of support vessels are to start exploration drilling in the Beaufort Sea next year. Permits allow the drillship and its support fleet to emit 30 tons of particulate matter, 240 tons of nitrogen oxides and 80,000 tons of carbon dioxide. A coalition of the Native Village of Point Hope and several environmental groups appealed EPA's decision to issue a different Clean Air permit for Shell's drillship Discoverer. The ship is to start exploratory drilling in the Beaufort and Chukchi Seas in June 2012.

Earthjustice lawyers say that the Arctic is already under huge stress from climate change, and that Shell's industrial activities would significantly increase global warming pollution in this critical region, which is warming twice as fast as the rest of the world. The appeal was filed before the Environmental Appeals Board by the Center for Biological Diversity, Native Village of Point Hope, Resisting Environmental Destruction on Indigenous Lands, Alaska Wilderness League, Natural Resources Defense Council, Northern Alaska Environmental Center, Ocean Conservancy, Oceana, Pacific Environment, the Sierra Club and the Wilderness Society. The organizations are being represented by Earthjustice.

USDA funds water improvements in Diomede, energy improvements in Stebbins

Little Diomede will see some improvement in their water situation as they received grants for the construction of a new 340,000-gallon water storage tank and 500 feet of water distribution mains. The additional storage capacity of the new tank would ensure that the community has a yearround safe water source. The current tank is filled for winter use, but the water supply typically runs out around March. The washeteria is then All households on Diomede use privies and honeybuckets. Unalakleet was among a few villages that received construction and planning funds for water and wastewater improvements. Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium received $12.3 million in grants for water and sewer systems including Golovin and Kiana.

The money comes from the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development which awarded funds to the Rural Alaska Village Grant program funding and a grant to the Denali Commission for Norton Sound projects. The $5.7 million award to the Denali Commission in Alaska will fund projects to upgrade the Stebbins/St. Michael Rural Power System and replace a generator for the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, Inc.

Susitna Dam gets project manager

The plan to create a multi-billion dollar, mega-hydroelectric power plant by damming the Susitna River in South Central Alaska is moving forward as the Alaska Energy Authority hired a project manager, Wayne Dyok. Dyok is slated to begin work on Nov. 1. Dyok has more than 35 years of U.S. and international experience in Federal Energy Regula-Commission licensing. engineering design, environmental studies and energy planning on hydroelectric projects. He has managed major hydroelectric licensing projects for the California Department of Water Resources, Seattle City Light and Dominion Generation. Dvok has a master's degree in civil engineering and is a licensed civil engineer in

Dyok also served as chief hydraulic engineer and assistant manager on the Susitna hydroelectric

During last months' elections, Talkeetna residents voted on an advisory ballot, opposing the construction of the Susitna-Watana dam by a vote of 109 to 19. According to community radio KTNA, a local group spearheading opposition to the dam, the Coalition for Susitna Dam Alternatives, believe that, with education, others will see that the dam is too big, too expensive, and unnecessary given other more viable alternatives. They are concerned about potentially devastating impacts on salmon and other ago. The bulk of the money for the project, $666,508, came from the Denali Commission, plus a port match 20 percent $166,627, and $63,865 for the difference between the estimate and the bid coming from the port's FY 2013 maintenance and operation fund.

The President of the United States Barack Obama awarded 13 Americans with the highest civilian award, the Citizens Medal, and among them was Yukon leader Clarence Lee Alexander. The president in his speech said that Alexander has helped lead the charge in protecting the Yukon River Watershed. In addition to working to save the waterways, he has been instrumental in saving lives through the Council of Athabascan Tribal Governments, which provides health care to some of the most remote villages in North America. The president said that Alexander exemplifies the difference one person can make in preserving natural resources and cherished traditions for the next generation of Americans.

High mast lighting uses mounts of 100 feet or more to light large areas, which port boss Joy Baker said was needed for safety and opportunity for vessel landing and unloading. When Councilman Stan Andersen asked what the port had been using up to now, Baker responded that operation required two to three lower lights for barge loading and unloading; the new lights are high efficiency lights that would be on only as needed. Andersen also pointed out that there was only $1,200 difference in the bid from ASRC Builders and the next bid from Puffin Electric and wanted to know if ASRC had been found capable and had equipment in town. Josie Bahnke, city manager, responded that ASRC would be using three subcontractors for the job: STG, Inc., for dirt work, NJUS for electrical work and PK Electrical as electrical administrators. The project engineers, PND Engineers, reviewed the bids before the award. Knodel abstained from the approving vote, as her son, an electrician, would be working on the job, she said.

Knodel asked that Mayor Denise Michels appoint Jim West, Jr. to the Port Commission. Andersen balked, asking that the issue be taken up in executive session. Michels pointed out that a person being discussed in executive session had an option to be present. West was not present at the Council meeting. The Council approved West's reappointment to his expired seat with a vote of 5-1. Knodel commented that West had done a good job, was a port user and knew a lot about the operations.

Under water and lights business, the Council received an update on a wind turbine project poised for Banner Ridge from NJUS Manager John K. Handeland, but attempted to put the brakes to the project in favor of taking a broad look at big-picture, long term energy options to ease the high costs keeping Nome residents and businesses under siege.

NJUS has applied for funding for one, and now two, 900 kw turbines to join Banner Wind Farm's 18 smaller machines. Handeland met with the state Alaska Energy Authority, a panel that has approved the conceptual design, approving its progress to the next phase of final design and permitting. The energy produced from the turbine project would potentially save half a million gallons of diesel fuel and allow a re-integration of two smaller generators to relieve wear and tear on the system's Wartsila 5.2 megawatt generators. NJUS is looking into funding for putting up two 900-kilowatt generators to use one pass of the large crane that has to be brought from Kotzebue.

Whoa, said Knodel. Whoa, said Andersen. They felt the town as a whole needed to sit down and talk about energy solutions and also have a joint work session with NJUS to look at the future. The diesel fuel oil meter hit $6 a gallon about a week ago, surpassing high oil prices in

"We need to have more expertise before we start shelling out our own money," Andersen said. State and federal funding is in the works, Handeland said, with NJUS working on obtaining a fraction as a local match. The turbines could be spinning in summer of 2013, with other energy options taking as long as 10 years to develop, Handeland said.

"We hope effort by Kawerak to coordinate regional energy plans will options. out Bahnke, city manager, added.

Studies lie in file drawers concerning coal, natural gas and hydroelectric energy sources. Realizing that people are leaving and business is suffering from high energy cost,s the Council wants to dig into storage cabinets to revisit studies and tofind energy solutions.

Knodel wants the drill records from gas exploration in Norton Sound from the state now that the leases have been turned back and the information is in the public record.

Concerning the fluoride—Handeland reported that NJUS is working with Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium to take them up on an offer to provide the fluoride chemical, the equipment and the training to restart fluoridation of Nome's drinking water supply. The Council did not act on a resolution from the NJUS board asking the Council to rescind the fluoridation requirement. An equipment failure stopped the fluoridation some months ago. The equipment is being replaced and ANTHC has agreed to replace test-state officials consider options for resolving qualifying statement issues.

Benchoff was the high bidder on 10 tracts and Meisterheim bid highest for two tracts offered at the outcry auction, according to Krause. He said high bidders paid a deposit of 88 cents per acre for each tract and were given receipts for the deposits. Leases larger than 160 acres were sold through sealed bidding.

Krauss described preparations on the day of the lease sale at Old St. Joe's Hall. He said signs posted on the entry door and on a table inside the building told prospective bidders to qualify by signing in on a register and filling out a qualification statement. The same information was included in a pre-sale notice, he added. He said it is a prerequisite to have a bidder's qualification statement on file even if the bidder is well-known.

Officials who assisted the lease sale in addition to Krause were Bill Cole, mineral property manager, Division of Mining, Land and Water; Allen Eddy of DNR's Division of Oil and Gas; and Leslie Tose, small mines coordinator with the Army Corps of Engineers, who is in charge of permitting the operations in deeper water.

Krause said Eddy came along to gain experience in the lease auction process and was instructed not to give numbers to bidders unless they filled out paperwork. (Bidders in the outcry auction held up number signs to make their bids.) Krause said Eddy has acknowledged he probably told several persons who asked whether they needed to fill out the form if they have mining permits that he wouldn't think so. Jim Alleva, one of two auctioneers from a private firm hired by DNR helped at a table, Krause added.

The Oct. 6 edition of the Nugget reported that bidding at the auction began an hour late because the plane carrying DNR officials was delayed. The story also noted that offshore gold leases aren't offered anywhere else in Alaska, and DNR's previous gold lease sale was held in 1999.

A decision whether to allow Benchoff and Meisterheim to file qualifying statements or to disqualify them in the absence of the required documents is due soon, Krause

Miners air complaints

Benchoff and Meisterheim presented verbal complaints about the qualifying statements issue to Joe Balash, deputy commission of DNR, and Brent Goodrum, director of the Division of Mining, Land and Water at public forum held by DNR Oct. 20 in Nome. DNR also hosted a forum in seven other Alaska communities in the past month to gather input on streamlining permitting processes at state resource agencies.

Both Benchoff and Meisterheim questioned why they had received a bidding number if they were not qualified to bid. "The procedures changed three times, and now it's the responsibility of the miners," said Meisterheim. Benchoff said some lease sale participants said they were told they were qualified to bid if they have a mining permit.

"[Some] are saying I drove up the price and was in collusion with the state," Benchoff said. "I had an influence on the auction by being able to bid. It's a Pandora's Box.'

Sandra Madearis said she wants to underline that the paperwork process was very casual for the gravity of the situation. "I said, 'What do I do, do I fill it out?' I have a riff on over 18." Madearis said she was told, "At some point you've got to fill this out," so she did.

John Manz said he bid second highest on a tract for which Benchoff made the top bid and would benefit if Benchoff is dropped, but Benchoff had a bid number and paid a deposit fee, and that's fair enough. "The bottom line was the money taken from each individual," Manz added. "The fees were minimal, but they paid the fees in good faith....

Dredge regs don't work

Manz said regulations specifying an 8-inch diameter hose and a maximum 36 horsepower motor for dredges in a recreational mining area are not feasible. "Most people now are not following the regulation," he

Manz explained that it's hard to find an application to mount on a 4by-5-inch pump that pumps 1,500 gallons of water per minute and have it work properly. He said motors with more than 36 horsepower level off at 32 horsepower because too much suction would pull rocks into the nozzle.

"We want gold, not to suck our way to China," stated miner Scott Travis. "Why does DNR even do horsepower?" Travis said he uses a Buick motor. "My V6 uses less gas: 30 gallons a week, while others with V8s burn 100 gallons a week....'

"Are there any miners actually working at DNR?" asked Travis.

Brent Goodrum said the division needs to get a workable answer back to the miners. Other state officials at the forum were Kirsten Rvan, director, Division of Environmental Health, Dept. of Environmental Conservation; and Bruce Phelps and Brandon McCuthcheon, Resource Assessment and Development Section, Division of Mining, Land and

Nome attendance low

DNR's Nome forum drew a dozen members of the public, most of whom participated in the Sept. 28 offshore lease sale. The meeting was linked by audio conference to the Kotzebue Legislative Information Office, but no one provided input from that site.

Meisterheim said a few people heard about the meeting by word of mouth in Nome. "The other 100 miners are not here and should be," he added.

The public can submit ideas for streamlining permitting online at http://dnr.alaska.gov.commis/Priorities/Permitting_Reform.html

ing equipment next. Handeland has told ANTHC he wants the fluoride monitoring system integrated into NJUS computer industrial control system.

The Council approved an ordinance accepting a right-of-way easement on Nathan's Loop at Panorama Subdivision for maintenance along with ownership of two lots for snow

Finally, Bahnke assured the Council that its involvement in a state building to be built by Sitnasuak Native Corp. on their land was following an orderly time line drawn up by Sitnasuak CEO Dave Hoffman and Mark Pfeffer of Pfeffer Development. At this stage of the game, according to the task list, the City and Sitnasuak have confirmed their commitment to the project and notified the state Dept. of Administration of the public to private partnership having secured Sitnasuak's site on Front Street and clarified that the financing and risk will be assumed by Sitnasuak, keeping the City in the clear. Sitnasuak will borrow the money, build the building, and then sell it to the City. According to conversation among the Council and City administration, the City will buy it only on paper, without funding, and sell it to the State of Alaska on the same day. In this way, the deal will be government to government.

Anderson still questioned whether the transaction would go against state procurement laws that require a competitive bid.

"I still don't see how that's legal,"

A next task on the project will be to nail down the size of the building and the cost, then forward these to the Dept. of Administration, followed by a construction phase, according to Bahnke.

rights? What is done to pass shares on to those born after Dec. 18, 1971? "As tribes we consider these sections to be a throwback to the days of termination when the only good Indian was one who had been made to prematurely join his ancestors," Williams said. "Out of necessity we have been developing and growing our ANCSA corporations for the last 40 years - we now must take the time to strengthen our tribes and their capacity as governments. We need both."

Williams said unity is needed to secure and protect Native ancestral lands, recover hunting and fishing rights and restore the rights of the socalled after-borns to have a stake in their corporations.

Musher and 2011 Iditarod champion John Baker of Kotzebue gave the keynote address on the opening day of AFN. Baker evoked the metaphor of traveling by dog team to bring about the message of what strength in unity means. "It was a 16year journey to winning the Iditarod," Baker said. "You can learn a lot from a dog team.'

Baker said when he first flew over the Iditarod sled dog trail, he wanted to run the race. After his first completion of the race he changed his dream: "I wanted to win this race," Baker said. "But what are the odds that one of the poorest mushers from Kotzebue is going to win the toughest race in the world?"

One of the ingredients of his success, he said, is to never give up on a dream. His role model, he pointed out, is his mother Marge Baker, who in the face of adversity never complained and always persevered. Baker's father died in an airplane accident and while Marge Baker raised seven children, she also owned and operated her own airplane taxi company. Baker said that he learned real courage from her and then cast the net of his speech further, to include what courage, strength and unity means in the larger context of Alaska's past, present and future.

Baker said that Alaska Native Corporations today are the backbone of Alaska's economy. "What makes our corporations so unique is that we are sharing," Baker said. "Our corporations are not victims, we are Alaska's economy. That's really something to be proud of," Baker said. He also reminded the convention that political unity sends a powerful message. "We faced the odds that a person would go to Washington who didn't represent us," Baker said. "But we came together and prevented a disaster."

Alluding to differing opinions on resource development, Baker said that even though they may not agree on how much mining and drilling is done in the arctic, they should make sure that their voices are heard.

Baker appealed to the leadership qualities that are in each individual and finished his speech with an episode from the trail. "In a particularly cold year, by the time we got to Unalakleet, I was spent and the dogs were spent," Baker said. Instead of giving in to frustration and tiredness. and resisting temptation to just give up, Baker said a wonderful thing happened. "When it was time to go, I gave the command to go [smacks his lips to mimic the sound of his command] and very little happened. But then I did it again, and Velvet [his lead dog] stood up. Then the dog next to her stood up. And pretty soon the whole team was up and we were off and running again, heading for Shaktoolik. Sometimes all it takes, is the willingness to stand up," Baker

His speech was met with a standing ovation and shouts of "Arigaa".

An honest debate

Tara Sweeney, representing the Arctic Slope, put the cards on the table during her speech regarding changes in the AFN. The country as a whole and the Native community in particular are faced with federal spending cuts never seen before.

This creates an unknown future in terms of funding and although the federal government has by treaty a trust commitment to Native Americans, budget cuts are a given in the new reality of budget deficits in the trillions and a House of Representatives controlled by Tea Party members whose sole mission is to cut the budget at all costs.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER - John "Quniaq" Baker gave the keynote address to kick off the AFN convention on Thursday, Oct. 20. Baker won the 2011 Iditarod Sled Dog Race and was repeatedly referred to as the first Native musher to win the race. Baker corrected the notion in his speech, acknowledging prior Native Iditarod champions Carl Huntington, Emmit Peters and Jerry Riley as well as mentioning second place winner Herbie "The Shishmaref Cannonball" Nayokpuk.

ROLE MODEL - Marge Baker, mother of John Baker, was greeted with thundering applause during John Baker's keynote speech. The 2011 Iditarod champion said that his mother is his hero and an example of living life with courage, determination and perseverance.

Alaska has wealth in its resources and substantial savings in state coffers, but as the oil that is pumped through the trans-Alaska pipeline is declining, Sweeney said, more resource development is needed to assure the survival of many current programs. As a result, a unified Native voice is needed to further the cause of self-determination and for continued funding of necessary programs. And not only does this mean a unified Alaska Native voice is needed, but it also means that mending of the relationship between Native Alaskans and the state government is in order.

Time and again, fiery speeches called for the state to recognize the federally recognized tribes. Roy Huhndorf, CIRI board member, said that the biggest impediment for a more fruitful dialogue between the Native community and the state is that the state does not recognize tribal governing rights.

Natasha Singh, general counsel for the Tanana Chiefs Conference, echoed the feeling and said that any deeper engagement would have to start with the state's recognition of tribes and ANCSA corporations. "Recognition is the first step, then we could develop a consultation policy and figure out a formal way how to speak to state entities," Singh said.

DNR Commissioner Dan Sullivan maintained that the areas of common interest are far greater than the areas of disagreement and differences. 'We want to build on that, we are committed to that partnership," Sullivan said. However, no commissioner commented on the request for formal recognition.

Sullivan, who was commissioner for the department of Law prior to his DNR appointment, said that while a lot of the discussions highlight rifts between the state and the tribes, Native and non-Natives, there is common ground. "We are all Alaskans and a lot of the problems that we are discussing are affecting all of us," he said.

Education commissioner Mike Hanley also expressed his willingness to work together. "We import 70 percent of our teachers," Hanley said. "They don't even understand Anchorage, and how can they be effective teachers when they don't understand the culture in rural Alaska? For the sake of Alaska, we need to raise our own workforce to live here, work here and thrive here," Hanley

Commissioner of Health and Social Services William Streur also reaffirmed that both the state and the tribal health organizations would fail if they would not cooperate and tackle the issues together.

Willie Hensley, one of the leaders pushing for the 1971 Native Claims Settlement Act, was not as optimistic. He half-joked that he isn't ready for a slow dance with Commissioner Sullivan yet, but said that concerns are deeply rooted because Alaska Natives didn't really have a say in the creation of the state of Alaska. "It's better to have a state in which we are citizens than have Alaska run from Washington D.C.," Hensley said. He added that one small part of Alaska has contributed much to the wealth of the state, but that recognition has yet to come from state entities. "It's about time for the state to help us out with some of the issues that are facing us," Hensley said.

During a following panel discussion, Georgianna Lincoln of Fairbanks said that Native people need to be more assertive in making their voices heard. "We need to become rabble rousers and we have to speak up," she said.

In the context of a question that asked how to encourage more Native people in state and community leadership roles, she went so far as to say, "We need to take their [commissioners] job, get on the assembly, be the mayor, that's how.'

Panel discussions were a new, added feature to the AFN convention. Instead of listening to reports all day, delegates were treated to panel discussions in an interactive, talk show format with comfy armchairs and a moderator. This format allowed for discussions between panel members and the audience through written, submitted questions. An electronic device was handed out to delegates and used to take opinion polls from the audience to questions posed.

Almost an entire day was dedicated to panel discussions with the theme on how to improve the Native relationship with the state. Top Department heads including the commissioners of Natural Resources, Education, Health and Human Services, Fish and Game, Commerce and Economic Development and Public Safety as well as Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell and the governor's senior rural affairs advisor John Moller were present, sitting in the front rows to listen to the panel discussions.

Outgoing North Slope Mayor Edward Itta said that the Native community needs to spread more awareness of the critical role that Native ANCSA corporations are playing for the economic wellbeing and health of the State of Alaska. "Our corporations are economic powerhouses but somehow that does not translate into recognition," Itta said.

He added that rural Native

Alaskans keep on having to explain their subsistence lifestyle to urban Alaskans. "There is a world of difference of living in rural Alaska and living in the urban areas. Our challenge is that we need to make them understand and go further and empathize with our lifestyle and then act," Itta said.

This was exemplified when the Alaska Legislature failed to extend the Alaska Coastal Zone Management program, a federal program that allowed local input in resource development affecting coastal areas. AFN delegates passed a resolution that called for the re-establishment of the ACMP "to allow meaningful participation by local coastal districts."

The panel discussions also high-

The committee also recommended the creation of Governance Council to oversee the operations of AFN and to afford full voting rights to tribes and village corporations as so-called class A members. Currently, only regional corporations, regional non-profits and villages have full voting rights that also come with a yet-to-be determined amount of According to Sweeney's committee report, only class A members in good standing are "eligible to participate at appropriate levels within the AFN organization." Sweeney ended her report saying that unity doesn't necessarily mean always agreeing on all issues. "Instead, unity should be defined by what we have all in common and what we all are striving for as a Native people: self-determination," she recommended installing term limits said Sweeney, from the Arctic Slope region, also issued a challenge to the tribes. "We must not be held hostage to the remnants of the BIA school teachers who wrote many of our IRA or Tribal council organic documents," she said. "The BIA continues its chokehold on our people by promoting an agenda that convinces grants." She then addressed the corporate entities and said that the creation of ANCSA corporations resulted not only in great successes, but also in a division between corporations and tribal entities. "We must reach across us that we are not sovereign or have no right to self-determination unless we are recipients of federal money or the aisle and seek to understand the needs of our tribal organizations and help lift them up and continue to build capacity in our communities,"

Northern Waters Task Force hears public testimony during AFN

Bv Diana Haecker

The Northern Waters Task Force took advantage of the largest gathering of Alaska Natives in the state during AFN week and held a public hearing in the Dena'ina Center in Anchorage last Wednesday. The meeting didn't draw a large crowd, but about 30 people in the audience shared their concerns with the task force.

Task force chair Reggie Joule (D-Kotzebue) said that public hearings were held all around the state and in early 2012, the task force will put forth recommendations to the Alaska State Legislature and then cease to exist, if there is no recommendation to extend it in some form or another.

No departments or federal testimony was invited and the floor was open to the public. Michael Brubaker with the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium presented a compilation of last year's disasters that can be linked to climate change. "All across Alaska, we experience climate change and its impacts.

"Some of these impacts affect health, cause injuries or death, and are affecting food security and food safety as well as water safety and sanitation infrastructure," Brubaker said. And then he rattled off the disasters: ice storm in Savoonga, back-to-back blizzards in northwestern Alaska, unusual windstorms in southcentral, storm surges in the north, avalanches in southern Alaska.

The month of May was the driest May on record, followed by an early outbreak of wildfires.

Unusual fungus turned the ocean orange in Kivalina, shell fish poisonings spiked in the south and sick ring seals show up on the North Slope with a mysterious skin disease. "The cause of these events is unknown, but it is important that we prevent harm from these events to communities," Brubaker said.

Dorothy Childers with the Bering Sea Elders Advisory Group presented a mapping project of 17 communities from the Kuskokwim Bay to the Bering Strait to show the combination of cultural and ecological significance of subsistence.

The project was prompted by the concern about changes in fisheries.

Childers presented the report and urged the task force to keep in mind that the underlying message of the report is that subsistence and the desire to continue their way of life is the Elders' primary concern.

A subsistence user from Merkoryuk testified to what he encounters. He said last November, he found a dead, mature ringed seal and sent it in to Fish and Wildlife for an autopsy. Turned out, the seal died of pneumonia.

On another occasion, he found a dead walrus with lots of cavities instead of teeth and tusks. This was also sent in for an autopsy. He said the first halibut he caught this season was terribly deformed with a long jaw, small head and horn growing out of his belly.

Reggie Joule closed the hearing saying that there is much science out there. "But we need to hear those who chose to live along the coast of the Bering Sea, not just those who want to take advantage of the situation," Joule said.

The last NWTF meetings are scheduled to take place in Barrow and Wainright before the task force compiles its findings for a report to the Legislature.

DISEASE OUTBREAK - SEALS

October 2011 Update

Over 100 sick or dead pinnipeds with diseased patches of skin have been discovered in the Arctic in recent months. The cause is unknown but is being studied. During July near Barrow, ringed seals were reported with blisters on flippers and face as well as hair loss. This condition is now being reported in the Bering Strait / Norton Sound region.

ACMP sees efforts for its revival

A ballot initiative aimed to revive the Alaska Coastal Management Program has garnered the support of the Alaska Federation of Natives, which issued a resolution to endorse the effort. The initiative is sponsored by the Alaska Sea Party, a group of municipal officials including City and Borough of Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho, Kodiak Island Borough Mayor Jerome Selby and Kenai Peninsula Borough assemblyman Mako Haggerty. Outgoing North Slope Borough Mayor Edward Itta voiced support for the intiative at the annual AFN convention and said that the program gave the locals a voice in big resource development projects which mostly are in rural Alaska.

"If we work together early in the process, the chances of a timely and successful start are much better than if local people are just left out in the cold. Coastal management never stopped a project in the past. It just gave communities a stake in the project." Itta said.

After operating successfully for 34 years, Alaska's Coastal Zone Management Program died when the Alaska Legislature failed in 2011 to renew it during both the regular session and two special sessions called in part to restore the program. Without a program in place, federal agencies need not consult state or local officials on questions of coastal development. If the petition is signed by some 26,000 Alaska voters, and if the Alaska Legislature fails to enact substantially similar legislation during the 2012 regular session, "An Act establishing the Alaska Coastal Management Program" will appear on either the August 2012 primary or the November 2012 Alaska general election ballot. If voters approve the measure, the Act will create a coastal management program to replace the one dismantled in 2011.

Important questions for end-of-life care

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Many important decisions must be made when a person reaches the end of life. Though modern medicine has given us the ability to treat serious disease and in many ways prolong meaningful life, modern technology sometimes gets in the way of a meaningful death. Machines can now breathe for us, keep our heart beating, and feed us long after the psyche (ancient Greek word for soul) has departed.

Most health care professionals want to honor a person's wishes regarding how she he or wants to be treated in the final days of life. But even well meaning providers and nurses cannot know what a person wishes when it comes to the many decisions regarding medication, nutrition, hydration, testing, and treatment that must be made during the closing hours of life.

In most medical encounters, people are able to speak for themselves and make decisions regarding their own health care. At the end of life, however, many people are unable to communicate with their providers, due to illness, dementia, or lack of consciousness. This is why most states, including Alaska, allow patients to provide guidance ahead of time regarding how they wish to be treated if unable to speak for them-

> An "Adv a n c e Health Care Directive," otherwise known as a "Living Will," provides the health care community portant information regarding a person's wishes at the end of life.

A living will answers six important questions: 1. How long do you wish to prolong your life? If you are unconscious with no hope for recovery, or have a terminal illness that will end your life in a short amount of time, do you want your life prolonged by artificial means, like a respirator or pacemaker?

2. Do you wish to be fed artificially? If you develop a terminal illness or advanced dementia and are unable to feed yourself or refuse the assistance of others to feed you, do you want to be fed artificially by a feeding tube placed in the stomach or by a permanent intravenous line?

3. Are you an organ donor? When you die, do you wish to have your organs or tissues donated to living persons in need of transplant? Do you wish to donate your body for education or research purposes?

4. What if you are pregnant? If you become unconscious with a life-threatening illness or injury while pregnant, what are your wishes regarding artificial life support until the baby can survive outside the womb?

5. Who is your primary physician? At the end of life there may be many doctors, surgeons, and specialists involved in your treatment. Do you have a physician who knows you and your wishes that can serve as a contact for the many providers involved your care?

6. Who do you want to speak for you? If you are unconscious or otherwise are unable to speak for yourself, who would best be able to let doctors and other health professionals know what you would say or want done? In Alaska you may pick up to three people to serve as your agent(s) for making health care decisions.

An official Advance Health Care Directive form can be downloaded from the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services web page: http://www.hss.state.ak.us.

Though end-of-life care may be an uncomfortable topic, when is comes to receiving the best care at the close of life, your wishes matter. There may come a time when you cannot speak for yourself. If this happens, one of the best gifts you can leave your family, loved ones, and healthcare providers is clear direction regarding your wishes and who should speak for you if you lose the ability to speak for yourself.

Saying it Sincerely

"Hungry for More!" By Pastor Mike Christian - River of Life Assembly of God A member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"Then Moses said, 'I beseech thee, show me thy glory.'

Moses is one man who had seen it all. Raised in the court of the King of Egypt, he had seen the pomp and glory of the Pharaoh. Then fleeing to Midian, he experienced the rural life of a sheepherder for 40 years. After this, God appeared to Moses, calling him to be the deliverer of the Jews, bringing them out of the bondage of Egyptian slavery.

Moses saw the mighty hand of God work nine great miracles in Egypt so that it humbled the pride of Pharaoh. He also saw God open the Red Sea and provide miracle "manna," bread for the three million travelers who were on their way to the land of Canaan.

One of the greatest experiences Moses had was when God called him to Mt. Sinai and gave him the Ten Commandments. God cut out stone tablets from the mountain and wrote on them the greatest moral code ever given to Moses was a personal friend of the Living God (Exodus 33:11). Yet Moses was hungry for even more. That day, as God and Moses visited, Moses said, 'If I have found grace in your sight ... I beg of you – show me your glory' (Exodus 33:12&18).

This is what Moses hungered for more than anything else. He had experienced religion, miracles, victories, and more, but there was an overwhelming desire, a hunger to see God's glory, the innermost essence of God

Are you hungry for more? Do you want more than just attending church, Bible studies and meetings? Is your soul crying out for a new experience with Almighty God?

Then seek God's glory! Moses did and God showed him part of it. The effects were so great a veil had to be placed over Moses' face because of its great radiance from being with God. If you are truly "Hungry for more," then step out of the "box" and make the "glory of God" your goal! May the Lord bless you with his abundant love and glory!

Paul "Koublou" Charles Johnson

Paul "Koublou" Charles Johnson died suddenly on October 14. Paul entered this world on July 28, 1957 as the eighth child, and fourth son, of Harry, Sr. and Ruth Johnson. Whether folks knew him as Paul, "Paulie," "Koublou", "Chubs" or "Putty," it was apparent from a young age that he was a caring, generous person.

Paul spent his early years in St. Michael with his family until their move to Unalakleet in 1964. His school years showed evidence of his intellect and remarkable abilities. He attended the Unalakleet Day School and graduated from Covenant High School as the 1975 valedictorian. After high school he attended Le-

Paul "Koublou" Charles Johnson

Tourneau University and the University of Alaska.

Paul had a vast array of skills that made him successful at almost everything he did, whether it was running the Unalakleet Native Corporation, building boats, guiding big game hunts, dog mushing, commercial fishing/crabbing or just being an "uncle" to his vast group of biological or "adopted" nieces and nephews. He was as at home in a corporate boardroom as he was elbow-deep in an engine overhaul. He was a gifted public speaker and a patient one-on-one teacher. He could drive policy decisions and Iditarod dog teams with equal ease. He did all of this, and more, with a humility and grace that is uncommon. He never wanted recognition for any of his accomplishments, always deflecting the praise. His generosity was unparalleled whether he was paying a crew share or giving the shirt off his back.

Following in the steps of his grandfather, Henry Ivanoff, who ran in the original Serum Run, Paul became an accomplished dog driver. He ran the Iditarod Sled Dog Race in 1986 and 2011 as well as many other mid-distance and local races. He sat on numerous boards and held several executive positions. He guided annual spring and fall big game hunts that resulted in world class trophies. He operated the F/VSKJ in the Norton Sound king crab fishery, completing his most successful season this year. His meticulous aluminum boat fabrication resulted in strong, safe vessels.

All of this pales in comparison to the loving care he gave to his mother, Ruth, after his father passed away. Paul was her rock. Annually he would make special trips to allow her to spend time in the country she loves.

Accolades and praise are often given to those that pass on. But Paul is one of the few who have earned all that can be said. He lived his life to the fullest while keeping his God first, friends and family second, and himself third. He leaves a host of family and friends who grieve at the loss of a unique and irreplaceable man while rejoicing at the eternal joy he earned and is experiencing in Glory.

Paul is survived by his mother Ruth Laura Johnson, sisters Harrilyn (Harold) Sager, Tia (Larry) Wilson, brothers, Frank Sr. (Kathy), Merlin Sr. (Velma), Harry Jr. (Joan), Gus (Francine), Brian (Louann), Bruce (Gloria), Middy (Aurora) and numerous nieces and nephews, cousins, aunts and uncles. He was preceded in death by his father, Harry Johnson Sr., sisters Laura Dill and Esther Lestenkof, nephew Dane Johnson, maternal grandparents Henry and Laura Ivanoff, paternal grandparents Alexander and Malorie Johnson.

His memory and legacy will live on in the lives of all he touched.

Elouise Cobell

Elouise Cobell, an enrolled member of Montana's Blackfeet Tribe who led a 16-year landmark legal fight to get the federal government to pay an estimated 500,000 Native Americans for mismanaging their trust accounts, died October 16 at Benefis Hospital in Great Falls, Mont.

A great-granddaughter of Mountain Chief, one of the legendary Indian leaders of the West, she had been diagnosed with cancer weeks before her class-action lawsuit was given final approval by a federal district judge in Washington on June 20.

Born on the Blackfeet Reservation on Nov. 5, 1945, with the Indian name Yellow Bird Woman, Ms. Cobell was one of eight children.

Her survivors include: her husband, Alvin Cobell of Blacktail, Mont.; a son, Turk Cobell and his wife, Bobbie, of Las Vegas, two grandchildren, Olivia, and Gabriella, a brother, Dale Pepion of Browning, Mont., and three sisters, Julene Kennerly of Browning, Mont., Joy Ketah of Seattle and Karen Powell of Browning, Mont.

In 1996, Ms. Cobell and four other Native Americans filed a law-suit against the federal government demanding that the government give Native Americans an accounting of billions of dollars it received for oil and gas leases and other uses of individual Indian lands held in trust by the United States.

After a long, tenacious fight with the government, the Obama administration agreed to settle the lawsuit in December, 2009, creating a $3.4 billion fund to, among other things, make payments to individual Indian money account holders. This was the largest class action settlement with the government in American history.

After finding government records of the Indian accounts inadequate to support an accounting of all items of the Individual Indian Trust, a federal judge declared the Indians could never receive a full accounting of their funds and other trust assets. He then urged the parties to engage in direct negotiations at the highest levels, negotiations that led to the historic settlement. The settlement was ratified by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President of the United States. It then went back to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for final approval and judgment, which was entered on August 4, 2011.

Ms. Cobell served as lead plaintiff in the lawsuit and tirelessly led the effort from Browning, quietly raising millions of dollars for expert witnesses and other major costs associated with the litigation.

In part, Ms. Cobell used funds from her own 1997 "Genius Grant" from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation's Fellows program to fund the cost of the lawsuit.

In 2005, she received a Cultural Freedom Fellowship from the Lannan Foundation, an award that cited her persistence in bringing to light the "more than a century of government malfeasance and dishonesty" with the government-run Indian Trust.

Two years later, she was one of 10 people given an AARP Impact Award (for making the world a better place), and in 2004 the National Center for American Indian Enterprise Development presented her with the Jay Silverheels Achievement Award. This year, she was named "Montana Citizen of the Year" by the Montana Trial Lawyers Association.

She received the 2002 International Women's Forum award for "Women Who Make a Difference," in Mexico City.

Ms. Cobell was one of the founders of the Native American Bank, based in Denver. Her professional and civic experience and expertise includes serving as co-chair of Native American Bank NA and as

Hello out there,

Wow, this first day of snow is always so beautiful. But, then, I wake up every day and look outside at my scenery and think what a beautiful sight I have.

Anyway, I tried to order a computer from a company that says, "because Alaska and Hawaii are not a part of the 48 states, then we don't service those states." Last thing I knew Alaska and Hawaii are a part of the United States. And it seems to me, things like computers would be sent by air anyway, so why should our states be excluded?

Along with the outrageous prices we have to pay to travel within Alaska. After all, aren't we the ones providing the oil and gas from our resources? I find it funny that a person could travel anywhere out the States for way less then it costs us to travel round trip to Anchorage, Nome, or just about anywhere else around here.
